Answer

Many people believe that people in the entertainment industry are overpaid. I agree with the statement since other occupations are more important and vital for human beings. I believe all biological scientists like pharmacists and biochemists in our society should be paid more because they immerse themselves in laboratories working night after night to discover novel ideas and create innovative techniques. On the other hand, the job of movie stars or pop singers is to entertain the public and not categorize them as vital jobs. Therefore, I do not think they should be highly paid.

Answer

Some people hold the view that talent is essential for achieving goals. While there are undoubtedly valid viewpoints, on the contrary, I believe that hard work is imperative to success. That is to say, if a person does not care about the painstaking work, then his indolence will ultimately affect his achievements. According to a joint effort by five leading Universities in the US and the UK, 76 percent of the interviewees who agree with backbreaking work, have expressed that they have better performance at work. To put it in a nutshell, we may safely conclude that hard work is the real key to success.

Do you think that people can ever be truly selfless? Explain your reasons for your opinion.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

Some people believe that a few people can be truly selfless while I rather hold the realistic view that it is almost impossible to be truly selfless. Before discussing this issue, we must reach a consensus on the meaning of the word "selfless," which puts others' interest before self-interest. Then, if a person always disregards self-interest, he will instantly find himself on the brink of death as there is nothing left for himself. For example, a person may give up his life for saving someone else, and such a move can be regarded as selfless. However, it is impossible for him to always be selfless throughout his life. In conclusion, people can be selfless, but cannot always be truly selfless because there is no such real condition for him to give out everything.

Answer

Last month, my friends and I went to the snow mountain for skiing. Frankly speaking, I had never skied before, but I signed up for that without hesitation because I had always wanted to give it a try. It was a Friday night, and the coach, which was nearly full as it was peak season for skiing, left the city exactly at 6:30, heading for the snow mountain. When we arrived at the town where our hotel was, it was already midnight, and the skiing class would start at 10 o'clock sharp the next morning. The following day, when we finally set our foot on the snow mountain, we were amazed by the gorgeousness the nature presented to us. Before attending the skiing class, I was worried that if I could learn a new skill simply in a couple of hours. To everyone's surprise, despite the fact that it was literally my first attempt at skiing, I picked it up very quickly, probably because I had learned roller skating when I was about ten years old. Technically, the course's primary content was all about balancing yourself on the skateboard. Thinking back, I suppose both of the sports share the same way of balancing, which, luckily, facilitated my learning. After finishing the class, I was free to go on my own. I couldn't wait to catch up with my friends. It wasn't their first time skiing. Therefore, they didn't have to take the class. Initially, as a matter of safety, we took the relatively easy route where the slope of the hill wasn't that steep, and the whole journey went smoothly. This gave me the illusion that I had already mastered skiing. However, when I followed them up to the top of the hill that was categorized as the tougher route, suddenly everything changed. Since I hadn't learned to turn in the class, the moment when I saw an obstacle in front of me, I wasn't able to change my direction, plus that I was heading down with great rapidity on a steep hill, braking wouldn't help a thing, what I could do was to fell aside on purpose. Fortunately, the ground was covered over with thick snow, so it didn't hurt much. But still, it could be dangerous if not handled well. Therefore, I was then taught how to turn while staying, and again, I quickly learned. After that, my friends and I went around and around on the harder track, and we all had

Great fun.

Answer

People at my age often are not willing to try new things as they are afraid of change. It is difficult for them to get out of the comfort zone and explore new things either because they are already satisfied with the current situation or because they fear the high cost of failing to achieve goals in new settings. We can present them with fruitful outcomes of changes and encourage them to change step by step and once a time rather than to drastically engage in new events. Therefore, they can either be interested or slowly accept the new reality, and it causes no pain during the process.

Answer

When it comes to a certain thing that people have to have in order to be happy, I suppose that would be love. First and foremost, everyone must have been told a number of lovely tales when they were young, and every single story would necessarily end up with a happy ending, which is submerged by true love. Love is the only most crucial thing that forges the bonds between people. In most cases, people's relationship is hinged on love, and a healthy relationship can definitely bring happiness to one's life. That kind of happiness lasts forever.

Your response

Words:0

Answer

Some people contend that school is the right place to learn knowledge as well as moral values like respect, obedience, and honesty. I tend to disagree with this opinion. In my view, parents should guide their children on how to be a good member of society rather than teachers. The main reason is that children spend more time at home mimicking parents so parents should make some good examples. Moreover, children mostly look at teachers as some outsiders who would teach them the academic lessons, not personal values. Thirdly, teachers, who spend limited time with each child, sometimes do not know the students' own choices; thus, they cannot evaluate them correctly. As a result, schools should stick to core subjects.

A generous person gives a hand to others while expecting no rewards. A person immediately comes into my mind is Bill Gates, who has donated most of his wealth to charity. Being a generous person is important, because helping others has a powerful impact on our relationships with others. It connects us to friends, family, and colleagues. It boosts happiness and strengthens communities. What is more, when people give freely, they also put themselves on a path to a happier and healthier life. It is a process that helps the receiver as much as enriches the giver.

Some people contend that students should just follow a set course of study. While, in my view, students should have a say in their course content. The main reason is that enabling students to choose which modules they take, allowing them to specialize and pursue their specific interests, will eventually tailor a generally interesting course to their individual passions and allow them to take increased responsibilities for their own learning. In fact, student choice does remain an extremely positive feature within some courses. Whereas, a structured course may not appeal to the interests of some students, so there will be less inspiration, motivation, and engagement from students.

Being famous can be beneficial, but I think the disadvantages will outweigh the advantages. Being famous means no privacy. People can never go anywhere in public without having crowds of people follow them and having cameras in their face. While, there are many people who still pursue fame and compliments, because they are indulged by their own fans, followers, and worshipers. When choosing between popularity and kindness, I am inclined to the latter one. The main reason is that being kind can build a genuine relationship between people. There are many ways for us to learn. While some people believe that the main source is failures, others insist on the opposite view. I believe that learning from mistakes is a better option. The main reason is that pain allows us to learn very quickly. Looking at the history of successful entrepreneurs, they had multiple failures before they then became successful. Failure also makes us find our inner strength. It gets us through the worst of times. Failure also gives us a reality check, much like storms, earthquakes, and tsunamis, which remind us, we do not have control over everything. In fact, failure, through its life-altering lessons, makes us into better person.

Young children in school often face bullying from elder children either because they have not enough courage to report to teachers or because teachers treat it as simple quarrels between students. It is most important for teachers to realize that bullying should not be tolerated at all and should be identified and seriously dealt with once the incident is reported. This way, students will be reassured to report bullying. When I was younger, such matters are not emphasized and are often buried after anything serious happened. Fortunately, I was not bullied to a severe extent yet such issue should be seriously dealt with by implementing certain law to protect our children.

The person who is very kind toward others is my grandfather. To me, he is a hero, an ideal father, a benevolent person, and a man of honor. He is around 75 years old now. We live in a joint family, and he is still the head of our family. Though he can't manage every aspects of our family due to his age, he is still the decision-maker for our family, and each decision he has ever made involves a high level of kindness towards every other person. I remember him from my early childhood when he used to play chess with me. He taught me many things, including the value of kindness. He told me some of his great adventures in his life through stories, and those stories are still inspiring for me. He is a person of his word. He would not talk much, but when he does, it carries unparalleled weights. He is a benevolent person, as I have seen him helping many people in our locality. We never take his kindness for granted; instead, we very much appreciate all the things he has done for us. I revere my grandfather for his acute observation and great decisions. Do you think that minors who bully others should be charged with a crime, or do you think they should be dealt with differently? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

Bullying is when someone or a group of people who have more power than you, repeatedly use words or actions to hurt you. Bullying can be very hurtful and cause lots of pain. In some cases, the one who has been bullied may bear the pain himself and keep a distance from the bullies. But this won't stop the bullying. In worse scenarios, the one who has been bullied might fight back, and their approach may not be appropriate and justifiable due to the lack of thoughtfulness and maturity. Sometimes the hatred may even cause serious problems. Therefore, it is advisable that there should be some type of judicial system in place to prevent further bullying from happening. From my perspective, kids also need to be reprimanded for what they do. Current laws aren't treating the problem seriously enough. Kids and teenagers are supposed to behave and treat their peers nicely. If the bullying is continuous and repetitive, then it should definitely be taken seriously. That is to say, bullying should be charged with a crime. However, it can be difficult to assess the extent of bullying due to a number of aspects. Therefore, a simple offense of bullying should be defined as a criminal offense. But in the case of young people, it would not involve any imprisonment or detention, but other sanctions, such as community service, can help young people learn the value of kindness and start to treat others well. Schools, workplaces, communities, and parents should all be involved in trying to stamp out bullying before it causes harm.

Explain a quality about yourself that you are proud of. How does this quality make you a better person? What can your friends learn from you because of this quality?

Your response

Answer

One of the best qualities I see in myself is the great attention to detail. Attention to detail refers to the ability to efficiently allocate one's cognitive resources to achieve thoroughness and accuracy when accomplishing tasks. Every single time I was assigned a task, I handled it with extreme care. I was so prudent that during the process, I always thought twice before I actually commence the work, and I did a thorough double-check to make sure that everything met the specified requirements. Developing strong attention to detail makes me more effective in the workplace, increasing my productivity and decreasing the likelihood of error. This is because attention to detail and quality of work are often closely linked, and it is a desirable skill for companies. Obtaining strong attention to detail requires practice and the implementation of a few key strategies, such as organizational skills, observational skills, and time management skills. The first step in improving my attention to detail is to get organized. Organization skills include the ability to use my physical space, mental capacity, and energy effectively and efficiently to reach the desired outcome. I always keep a pen and paper nearby at all times so that I can make lists and check things off as I complete them. Time management skills refer specifically to the way you divide your time between activities. Strong time management skills allow you to do more in less time. Observational skills refer to your ability to notice something or someone to gather information. Observational skills improve your ability to interact with others and respond appropriately. Last but not least, I always adopt a mindset where quality is my number one priority. If I find that my workload is impacting my ability to produce quality work, I will talk to my manager or look for ways to have a quality control strategy in place.

What is something you would ask your parents for advice about? Why do you think that your parents are experts on this topic? What do you think your parents would advise you to do?

Your response

Answer

When it comes to something I would ask my parents for advice about, I suppose it would be either to get married first or to stabilize my work first. This problem could be tough as there are indeed disadvantages associated with getting married before the maturity of my career. For instance, one of the biggest problems it will cause is the time distribution between work and family. Whether to spend more time accompanying my beloved wife or working can be an awfully hard decision. Therefore, I would probably seek advice from my parents. Their advice is deemed to be valuable to me because they are a lot more experienced in life than I am, given the huge age difference between them and me. Also, for as long as I can remember, their marriage has been an excellent model. For this, I wonder, behind such a steady and harmonious marriage, what the secret is. In terms of what they would say to me, I suppose that they would suggest that I do whatever I prefer because they will always support me. This is what parents in a typically traditional Chinese family will do for their children – they will support their children throughout their entire life. This has been an inherent part of Chinese culture for centuries.

If you had to get rid of one holiday from your culture, what would you choose? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Answer

If I had to get rid of one holiday from my culture, I probably would pick Christmas, and the reasons are presented below: First of all, I feel like Christmas is supposed to be a holiday of joy and giving when families reunite, recall things – either the happy ones or the sad ones – happened during the past year and prepare for the new year to come. Now, however, Christmas has become more like a shopping festival. That is to say, despite the fact that Christmas is on the 25th of December, people actually start to prepare one or even two months beforehand. You will see people in Santa Clause costume on the streets, holding a large carton board with "Christmas Shopping" and an arrow on it, telling you where to go shopping for Christmas. Their costumes are so noticeable that everyone passing by will not miss them. I have never been to one of those malls before, but I suppose you can get pretty much everything you need from there, probably even a Christmas tree as I have seen people transporting Christmas trees home on top of their cars. Interestingly, such Christmas shopping has even sparked competitions of decorations, which is particularly fierce in wealthier suburbs. Neighbors in those localities spare no effort in decorating their houses with all kinds of ornaments you can possibly imagine. For example, inflatable figures (or dolls) in the shape of Santa Clause, elks and other creatures relating to Christmas, not to mention lights. From my observation, people have become more focused on shopping and getting ready for Christmas rather than family reunion and reflections on the past. People have gone too far that they have forgotten the original intention of Christmas.

Describe a trend that is really popular with your peers. Do you think that it will last? Why or why not?

Your response

Answer

When it comes to a prevailing trend among my peers, I suppose that would be star-chasing. Nowadays, most of my peers are heavily affected by the celebrities they see on TV, and most of those celebrities are skinny. Young people are so fascinated by those influencers that they imitate the influencers in every aspect. However, celebrity influence on body image and substance use is often detrimental to teen mental health. A large proportion of teenagers compare themselves to images they see of celebrities. Moreover, almost half of them said that celebrity images make them feel dissatisfied with the way they look. Therefore, appearance is among teenagers' top concerns, teen girls in particular. Body dissatisfaction is linked to mental health challenges, including eating disorders, depression, and low self-esteem. Young women who consume media with many images of an unrealistic "thin ideal" are more likely to exhibit symptoms of disordered eating. Nearly half of teen girls wish they were as skinny as the models in fashion magazines. I think such a trend will be long-lasting as there are now countless companies dedicated to creating stars, and thus my peers will never get sick of star-chasing. One day, they are super crazy about one celebrity. The next day, they will switch their affection onto another more beautiful celebrity who has just emerged into their vision, and the transition can be so swift that no one would care to give a second more of thought.

What is something you and your generation owe to the next generation? Describe an issue or responsibility that will be important for your generation to address, and explain why it is important.

Answer

Human beings have been living on the earth for several thousand years and will continue to live for - who can be sure how many more years - a long period of time. If we keep harming the earth's environment, the planet won't last long. In this sense, our generation owes the next one a safe and sound home to live in. Therefore, it will make the planet more sustainable if our generation can help protect the environment. One of the most imperative things is to reduce the pace of global warming. To begin with, we can make smart choices by using energy-efficient products. In order to do this, it is critically important that we understand which areas of their life generate the most carbon emissions. In most cases, it would be the personal vehicles and electric appliances that contribute the most to global warming. Therefore, firstly, we can opt to travel to and from universities, workplaces, and shopping malls by public transportation, such as buses and undergrounds, rather than private cars, which can help reduce greenhouse gases emission by a great amount. Secondly, household appliances such as air-conditioners, televisions, washing machines, etc. normally consume the most power. Hence, we need to look at the energy consumption ratings when we plan to buy those items specifically. Apart from acting on our own, it is strongly advisable that we should also raise the awareness of protecting the environment among our parents, relatives, and all other people around us.

Answer

When it comes to a thing that I like the most about one of my parents, I suppose it would be my father's masculinity. To me, he is a hero, an ideal father, a benevolent person, and a man of his honor. He is in his 50s now. We live in a family of 4, and he is the head of our family. Though he can't manage every aspect of our family due to his age, he is still the decision-maker for our family, and every single decision he has ever made involves a high level of sophistication and great kindness towards every other person. I remember him from my early childhood when he used to play chess with me. He taught me many things, including the value of responsibility, honesty, and punctuality. He told me some of his great adventures in his life through stories, and those stories are still inspiring for me. He is a person of his word. He would not talk much, but when he does, it carries unparalleled weights. He is a benevolent person, as I have seen him helping many people in our locality. We never take his love and care for granted; instead, we very much appreciate everything he has done for us. I revere my father for his acute observation and great decisions. I love him and admire him so much that I want to become a person like him. I also express my kindness to the people around me and help them whenever they need a hand. Each time I am assigned a task, I will complete it within the given timeframe and to a high standard. As a result, I earned others' trust and forged healthy relationships.

Describe the last time you disagreed with your best friend. How did you solve the disagreement, and how did it impact your friendship?

Your response

Answer

I recently had a disagreement with a close friend of mine. It was a couple of days after I broke up with my girlfriend. There was a good deal of uncontrolled emotion on my side. I wasn't expressing myself well, and I knew it. He kept telling me what I had done wrong in the relationship rather than standing by my side, comforting me. I became more and more frustrated and less effective at explaining my feelings. I found myself laying unwarranted blame on my friend rather than admitting openly that something was hurting me, and I was feeling vulnerable. Ultimately, we had a long conversation and he took me to the karts for a wild ride. That resolved the situation. I was embarrassed and grateful, but I realized I needed to evaluate a few of my shortcomings to avoid making the same mistake again. I also realized that what I was feeling wasn't the problem. It was my inability to effectively convey what was in my heart and on my mind that led to hurt feelings and further misunderstanding. I am genuinely grateful for what he had done to me. Since then, we have become even closer. We are all in relationships because we have needs, so it is not a problem to be needy. Every relationship has ups and downs, so it is important to evaluate the situation holistically before taking any action. Whenever something goes wrong, I need to have more than one positive feeling for every negative feeling in the relationship to keep it healthy.

Do you think it's possible to develop meaningful relationships via technology, without ever meeting in person? Why or why not?

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

If I were asked whether it is possible to develop meaningful relationships via technology without ever meeting in person, I would say yes. First of all, being physically together is not an essential component of a lasting relationship. With the advances in modern technology, people are now able to communicate whenever and wherever they want. Even if the two parties know nothing about each other's appearance, they still can maintain the relationship by other means of communication. We have all heard of stories about penfriends, where friends keep in touch with each other by writing letters. Either way, they will not feel alone, but can virtually sense the other person's presence. Moreover, such relationships maybe even purer and more meaningful as they do not involve any kind of material. Secondly, as long as the two parties of the relationship share the same interest, they can be getting along well. For instance, relationships forged in the virtual world - internet-based relationships - can also be as meaningful as the ones developed in reality. I have seen and heard of those stories where two people get to know each other via online gaming. They appoint certain time to play games together, and later on move onto other aspects of their life but have never meet in person. In the games, they work in collaboration towards a common goal, say building their dream house together. Out of the games, they find other common interests. In conclusion, I believe it is possible to develop meaningful relationships via technology without meeting in person.

Do you think that the way people dress can tell you a lot about them, or do you think it's wrong to judge people based on clothing? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Answer

In some cases, clothes can tell a lot about a person. A person's clothing can give you clues into the type of job they have (for example, uniforms or business suits) or what they do for various activities (for example, exercise clothing). However, one has to be careful not to stereotype people based on their clothing. For example, I have had female friends that dress on the "sexy" side, giving the wrong impression to some men, but she actually quite conservative and intelligent. I have also known people who refuse to purchase clothes from anywhere but discount stores (such as Walmart or K-Mart) and are very financially well off. People dress the way they do for numerous reasons. Judging people based on their clothing can lead to misinterpretation.

What do you think is an effective way to cope with pressure? Explain the reasons for your answer.

Your response

Answer

It may seem that there's nothing you can do about your stress level. The bills aren't going to stop coming, there will never be more hours in the day for all your errands, and your career or family responsibilities will always be demanding. But you have a lot more control than you might think. In fact, the simple realization that you're in control of your life is the foundation of stress management. I think the most effective way to cope with pressure is to identify the sources of stress in your life. Stress management starts with identifying the sources of stress in your life. This isn't as easy as it sounds. Your true sources of stress aren't always obvious, and it's all too easy to overlook your own stress-inducing thoughts, feelings, and behaviors. Sure, you may know that you're constantly worried about work deadlines. But maybe it's your procrastination, rather than the actual job demands, that leads to deadline stress. To identify your true sources of stress, look closely at your habits, attitude, and excuses: Do you explain away stress as temporary ("I just have a million things going on right now") even though you can't remember the last time you took a breather? Do you define stress as an integral part of your work, home life, or your personality? Do you blame your stress on other people or outside events, or view it as entirely normal and unexceptional? Until you accept responsibility for the role you play in creating or maintaining it, your stress level will remain outside your control.

The last time I had dinner with my entire family was fifty-five days ago as of today. I have to admit it makes me sad to think about it. Especially now, I realize it will never be the same again. We used to eat together every night, my parents, my sister, and I. We would talk about our days, about schools, about the latest superhero movies... everything. Then I went abroad for five months, and naturally, my parents and sister adjusted to life without me. When I came back for a month, we had to get used to each other again. The thing that I remember the most was that they automatically cooked for three, set the table for three, and did everything else together with the three of them. I was like a guest in the place I call my home. The experience could have been more enjoyable for me if my family didn't treat me like a guest.

Answer

We all need help at some point in our lives. I also receive help all the time and help others too. When we help others, it makes us happy. Today, I will talk about a time when I volunteered to help my friend Jack. Jack belongs to a low-income family. He didn't have enough money to buy books. And I used to receive some pocket money monthly in those days. Usually, I spent that money on chocolates, and I love chocolates. I decided to help him by using all my pocket money and bought a novel for him. I remembered how happy he was that day. Since then, we have become best friends. To be honest, I felt delighted, too, and that feeling was extremely different, which I never felt before. I realized that something could give me more happiness than eating chocolates, which is helping others to be happy. People who offer help to others can feel greater comfort and less stress. The giver, the helper, in turn, experiences a profound sense of satisfaction, of joy, of delight, of happiness, which decreases their stress levels as well.

Do you think that technology makes life easier for people, or just more complicated? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Answer

The controversial issue in respect of the impact of technology has attracted huge public attention and sparked a heated debate. Some people argue that technology has made living more complicated as people are now required to learn a broad spectrum of skills relating to new technology. As far as I am concerned, technology has made our life much easier than it was decades ago. I can cite a convincing example of the invention of the computer. One of the most conspicuous effects that computers have brought to our life is that they have largely increased people's work efficiency. This is to say, computer software can free people from repetitive work, which was time-consuming in the days preceding the invention of the computer. What's more, computers allow people to communicate and work anytime without the restriction of geographic locations. For instance, people can now work from home in cases where it isn't so convenient to get to the office. The outbreak of pandemic worldwide in 2020 has witnessed the unparalleled advantages of using technology. Additionally, it is an indisputable fact that people are now able to carry out highly sophisticated work with a high level of accuracy by using a computer. According to joint research conducted by Time Magazine, 50% of the experiments that involve great complexity can now be completed with the aid of computers. To put it in a nutshell, due to the factors outlined above, I can safely draw the conclusion that technology has made life much easier for people.

Name a goal that you want to achieve in the next year. What are you doing to achieve this goal? How will accomplishing this goal make you a better person?

Your response

Answer

When setting personal goals, we should first take stock of where we already are. Perhaps you have done quite well financially, but your personal relationships are severely lacking. Maybe your marriage is secure and amicable, but in the area of romance the fire has long dimmed. We need to take an honest assessment of where we have succeeded and where we have failed. Then we can determine how to proceed forward. With this in mind, one of my goals I would like to achieve in the next year is to commit to improved physical health. An excellent place to start when talking about your new year resolution is to make sure you actually desire the achievement, and the goal is achievable. That certainly starts with good physical health. There are no guarantees of living a long life, but it is possible to increase your odds greatly. To begin with, I have created an exercise plan that is feasible and enjoyable and compiled a "no" list containing all the food, which is high in fat or sugar that I am not supposed to consume. Say, if I am to work 8 hours on a daily basis, I would only be able to commit half to one hour to exercise, and the activities to do probably wouldn't involve any highly intensive ones, such as boxing, during weekdays. Now the plan has been formulated, I have to stick with it. Sometimes, I might need to push myself hard to overcome the inherent inertia, and to withstand the temptation of the unhealthy food that I once loved very much. Despite the tough process I am experiencing, by the end of this year, I will end up having an excellent physical condition that I have always wanted.

Answer

"The Emperor's New Clothes" is a short tale written by a Danish author. Two weavers promise an emperor a new suit of clothes that they say is invisible to those who are unfit for their positions, stupid, or incompetent – while in reality, they make no clothes at all, making everyone believe the clothes are invisible to them. When the emperor parades before his subjects in his new "clothes," no one dares to say that they do not see any suit of clothes on him for fear that they will be seen as stupid. Finally, a child cries out, "But he isn't wearing anything at all!" The story is funny because the emperor is foolish enough to believe in the invisibility of the clothes with not even a tiny suspicion, and he dares to parade in front of all the citizens. When I told the story to my classmates, some laughed out loud while others pondered the implication of the story. As an idiom, the use of the story's title refers to something widely accepted as true or professed as being praiseworthy, due to an unwillingness of the general population to criticize it or be seen as going against popular opinion. The phrase "emperor's new clothes" has become an idiom about logical fallacies and is often used as irony on fool.

Answer

The sense of belonging has long been a strong desire of human beings from a very early age. I suppose it is an inherent part of humanity. There is a saying "No one is an island," which reinforces my belief. As far as I am concerned, this saying holds true in every aspect of people's life. During the last two years of my university study, I was privileged to be admitted into a large community called Peer Network. It is a volunteering program established to welcome and help newly enrolled students during orientation weeks and throughout the first few weeks of each semester. I encountered this community when I was a freshman who was about to start his university journey in 2013. I am highly grateful for those who had helped me when I hardly knew anything about the surrounding environment. Now that I am a member of the community, I sense a feeling of belonging in that we share one common goal, which is to make the university a better place for both students and staff by supporting and helping others in need. And I get a sense of accomplishment via helping others. Being a Peer Networker not only facilitates my self-actualization but largely expands my social network, too. These are the most amazing advantages I get from being in this massive crowd.

What do you think are some ways that travel could change a person? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Your response

Words:0

Answer

There is no greater feeling than having your bags packed and knowing you're ready to go on your next adventure. There are few things in life that will impact you as much as traveling will. Something happens to us when we board a plane in one country and land in another—it's almost as if our eyes open again for the first time. The excitement and life experiences that happen when you travel are unlike anything else. These moments are transformative; they take us out of our element and remind us of why we are here. Nothing changes the way you view your own life experience like seeing the way other people live. Not only will you be more appreciative and thankful for the life you have, you'll also have a new sense of wonder and empathy for other cultures and countries. Soak in the language, the lifestyle and what people in foreign countries value—you'll realize it's different everywhere in the world and it will undoubtedly make you evaluate your own values. Once you're hooked on traveling and understand its true power, you know that looking up at the Eiffel Tower or seeing the beaches in Thailand out-values any merchandise you could ever possibly purchase. Instead of buying a luxurious car, you invest in what's more important to you—seeing places you haven't been to yet and immersing yourself in new cultures. Travel doesn't become something you do—it's a way of life. No country or even city lives the same way. Countries have different cultures, and people have different beliefs, but when you travel, you see that no matter how different people are or the way they live, there is inherent goodness in most people. It's the common thread that ties us all together.

What is a practical skill that you believe all students should learn in school? Why would this skill be helpful to learn? What would be a good way to learn this skill on your own?

Answer

The ability to cook a meal and eat it is a necessary life skill. It will save you when your favorite takeout restaurant is closed for a holiday, or there's no time to go to the restaurant, or in the midst of a global pandemic, such as the Corona Virus we are all experiencing worldwide at present. Being able to cook can also catalyze your relationships, such as romance. Imagine that on the night of Valentine's day, you and your beloved one can spend some time together at the kitchen, with the delightful music being played, and then drink some wine and have two beautifully cooked steaks served on a table with candles lit up. Who would say no to such a romantic evening? This being said, a good proportion of our people are still struggling to learn this basic skill. Indeed, not all of us are gourmet chefs. Thanks to the advancement in technology, I happen to have learned a list of dishes from the applications on my mobile phone. They allow me to search for any dishes I feel like to be cooking, and more importantly, the receipt is vividly taught in a short clip, which enables me to learn with ease. Trust me, there are an enormous amount of resources readily available on the internet that can help you learn to cook. If you're not a big fan of the kitchen, have a few low-effort dishes in your repertoire, you feel confident whipping up, even if it's just macaroni and cheese.

What do you think it means to be an adult? Describe the skills, knowledge and other qualities that a person should have as an adult.

Your response

Answer

When it comes to the core value of being an adult, I suppose it would be the responsibility. Being an adult essentially means that you need to assume certain responsibilities, especially for things you had done since you are now a lot more mature than you were when you were a kid. An adult is supposed to understand the effect of his or her action on the rest of the world. Therefore, you are supposed to behave appropriately. This requires you to think twice before acting. It also means understanding how your surroundings affect you. If you are an adult, then you know how to make choices based on your preferences, beliefs, and abilities—choices that allow you to succeed in the world. To become an adult, you need maturity and experience—and certain knowledge and skills. To take responsibility for your life and your decisions, you can no longer try to shift the blame when things don't go right. It would help if you stopped worrying about whose fault the problem is, or what someone else should do about it, and start focusing on what you can do to fix the problem or deal with the changes that this problem may cause. Taking responsibility puts you at the choice and allows you to choose how to respond to life's challenges. You will move into the driver seat of your life's journey.

Answer

In the case of a house fire, the one possession I would try to rescue first would be my laptop. Out of all the possessions, I consider my laptop the most valuable one. First of all, my laptop is obviously the most expensive item. It is not only because of the monetary value of the laptop that I choose to rescue it first but also because of the precious memory I attached to it. The laptop was a gift from my father on the day I went overseas to further my study. I have weighed up the cost of replacing it over everything else. For many of us, our one item to rescue from the flames is of sentimental value, something priceless that can't be replaced should tragedy befall it. For everything else, we know there's home insurance, which can save us plenty of heartaches when it comes to picking up the pieces and moving on after something breaks or our home is damaged. I wish to keep memories of experiences and what I consider lifetime achievements. However, it's not just sentimentality that comes into play. The prospect of losing productivity and missing out on work is something I would fear, so the first item to grab would be my laptop. I would grab my laptop so that work wouldn't be disrupted. My laptop is my extra limb. I use it every day, and there are also several essential documents stored in it.

Which sense--sight, smell, hearing, touch, taste--do you think is the most important? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

The human senses are our contact with the environment. But we don't think about our senses until an organ stops working. Humans have five senses: the eyes to see, the tongue to taste, the nose to smell, the ears to hear, and the skin to touch. By far, the most important organs of sense are our eyes. We perceive up to 80% of all impressions through our sight. And if other senses such as taste or smell stop working, it is the eyes that best protect us from danger. It may sound strange at first, but in addition to the sense of taste, the eyes also play a significant role in deciding whether something tastes good or not. In contrast to the other senses, the sense of taste is very weak: while it is possible for us to distinguish thousands of colors with our eyes, we can distinguish only five flavors: sweet, sour, salty, bitter and spicy, which roughly translates to meaty, a natural flavor enhancer, which is found especially in tomatoes, cheese, and meat. But as already mentioned, the sense of taste relies not only on the tongue but also on the eyes. For example, yellow, orange, and especially red food are considered sweeter than other colors. Even professional wine connoisseurs have been fooled in the past. When French researchers offered them white wine dyed with red food coloring, nine out of ten professionals could not distinguish it from ordinary red wine.

Name one country you would like to visit. Who would you want to take with you and why? What do you think you could learn on this trip?

Your response

Answer

I would like to visit England and bring my parents with me to enjoy this trip. I want to visit England because, as once the country's first line to defend against invaders, the English coastline these days is a peaceful place where locals and visitors can enjoy more tranquil pursuits. Taking a bracing walk on a windswept pier, eating delicious fish and chips, searching for marine life in rock pools, finding fossils in ancient cliffs, building sandcastles, and dolphin-spotting on picturesque beaches are just some of the activities offered by the English seaside. With these activities, my parents can enjoy the sunshine and swim in the sea at the same time, so that they can be relaxed and enjoy their retirements after a lifelong work. What's more, as my parents never travel abroad, this trip to England would be a new experience for them, not only to see different sceneries from other countries but also to experience the different cultures and delicacy. From this trip, I think I will be more connected with my parents and know more about them, and more importantly, I can learn the value of a family and how to connect strongly with my parents.

Talk about a time when you faced a difficult challenge and overcame it. How did you do it and what character qualities did you display?

Answer

Talking about a time when I faced a difficult challenge and overcame it, I would recall a time when I was in university. During my summer internship at a public relations firm, a client suddenly wanted to change an entire campaign strategy two days before launch. The client was unhappy with my team's first draft, so we were tasked with redoing the whole plan. We organized a late-night brainstorm that evening. After hours of work, I asked to take the lead on putting together a new deck. This was challenging because it was my first time putting a deck together, and our one chance to make the client happy again. I overcame this challenge by looking at previously successful presentations for the client, analyzing the feedback they gave on our initial presentation, and incorporating all of the team's ideas into the new deck. The client was ultimately thrilled with the fresh plan and all of the new ideas we included! From this challenge I think I have displayed the character qualities of a proactive problem solver and a team player, as well as hard work and good time management, I think I will benefit a lot in my life from these qualities.

What is something that is completely free but gives you as much joy as expensive things? Explain the reasons for your choice.

Answer

We all want to be happy. It's a desire as universal as our want for water, food, and fresh air. But happiness is a difficult thing to measure. Ironically, too much time and money spent in the pursuit of happiness has actually decreased a person's overall satisfaction. Actually, there are things in our life that are completely free and can also give us as many joy as expensive things, such as back to nature. There's a wealth of evidence to support the notion that spending time outdoors boosts your mental wellbeing. But before you say it, getting back into nature does not require weekend getaways or traveling outside the city. It is as simple as observing the trees, flowers, the sky, looking for the first signs of spring, walking on the grass, watching the sunset, smelling the air, growing things from seed, listening to the rain from inside, but more importantly, they are entirely free to have. To be more specific, watch the sunrise, which happens 365 days a year. But how often do you make a point of seeing it? Watching the sunrise is actually an ancient method of healing. And there are numerous other benefits, like enjoying a beautiful show of color and light and having quiet moments of stillness and reflection. It seems that despite hundreds of years of urbanization since the Industrial Revolution, we are all still creatures of the earth at heart, and having the free gifts from nature is also enjoyable.

Answer

For the question to describe a favorite room in your house, the answer can be various depend on different people. For me, the living room would be my favorite spot. I live in a newly built apartment building on the second floor with a large covered balcony overlooking a tree-lined parking lot. My record player sits atop an antique credenza, Nat King Cole bellowing forth into a sunlit room. A huge, favored original charcoal portrait leans against the wall, which I brought from an art gallery. A stately pair of tuxedo chairs, chosen in lieu of a couch, provide seating. There are books throughout the room used as much for decoration as for reading. I like to sit by the window, have a book to read and enjoy the beautiful sunshine coming from the full-height glass windows. I love being surrounded by the things that bring me joy, but moreover, I enjoy the opportunity to share my home with friends and family. A cup of fresh coffee and a sweet pastry served on vintage dessert plates is always on offer here for them.

What is one thing that you do really well? How did you become good at this skill? How has this skill helped you?

Answer

If I have to name a skill that I do really well, I think it would be writing. After graduated from university with a major in English, I still feel unstratified with my English writing skill, so I decided to go abroad and study for a master's degree in English. During my study, I have learned that writing well involves not just mastery of grammar but the development of the ability to organize one's thoughts into a coherent form and target it to an audience in the most effective way possible. So I dedicated myself more to learning and practicing writing. As a result, I can communicate with clarity by processing a good writing skill. Unlike talking, when I write, I look for more sophisticated words and expressions to describe what I have in mind. This helps me build a structure that will allow me to express myself better and communicate complex ideas in a much more effective way, which is also a useful skill that can help me work. A person who is a master of the written word can expect doors to open in just about every field.

Name an animal that you think makes the world a better place? How do you think people would react if it went extinct? What would be lost if the animal no longer existed?

Your response

Answer

The ecosystem on our planet consists of a large variety of species that have lived harmoniously for ages. I am convinced that there is certainly a meaning behind every existence, regardless of its size. Each creature has its role on this planet, with some being especially helpful to mother nature. The bat is all about saving the Earth. The creature of the night is an expert at slaying insects of all kinds, eating up to hundreds an hour. This appetite helps control bug populations and protect crops. Bats are also assisting in medical breakthroughs. Their saliva is used for stroke victims, while their ability to echolocate is being studied to help the blind. Bat guano, while it may be stinky, is one of the best fertilizers to keep the world flourishing. Without bats, our life would be chaotic as too many insects would greatly impact agricultural production. Farmers then would have to use a large number of pesticides, which is terrible for consumer's health and the environment. The absence of bats in the food chain would lead to a loss of balance in the world.

Your response

Answer

Loyalty is perhaps the most prized quality in any relationship. Those who can claim this virtue are often blessed with better health and overall relationship satisfaction and happiness. It comes at a time when my best friend William heard a rumor about me. He could have been passive and silent, and heard the rumor and not commented on it. Alternatively, he could have been a backstabber and continued to spread the rumor without even figuring out the truth beforehand. However, William defended me without a doubt and stopped that person who told the rumor and asked him not to spread it any further. The very moment I learned about the news, I was deeply moved. From his response, I could tell that he had a strong faith in me. No matter what others said about me, he would always stand by my side. Moreover, I learned that friends should always be loyal to each other. A loyal friend might not agree with you all the time, and they won't always have the same opinions as yours, but they still want you to know the truth.

What unusual animal do you think could make a great pet? Provide reasons for why you chose that animal.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

As an unusual animal to care for, hedgehogs are ideal for someone who wants a pet but doesn't have a significant amount of time or resources to devote to their care and attention. Hedgehogs require a simple terrestrial enclosure that is big enough for them to run around and play in. Petting a happy hedgehog is a bit like affectionately stroking a bristly hairbrush. Attempting to pet an upset hedgehog is more like trying to soothe a wriggly cactus of doom. Hedgehogs are apart of the Erinaceinae family, and are neither rodent nor are they related to the very similar porcupine. They thrive off a simple diet of fruits and insects, all of which can be found in your kitchen or backyard. Hedgehogs are not social creatures, unlike many other smaller animals, so it is not recommended to house more than one in an enclosure. Most owners will feed them a low-fat dry cat food supplemented with vegetables, mealworms, and crickets, and keep them in a large, flat-bottomed cage.

What is one thing about your home culture that you wish you could change? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Answer

Every family has a distinct way they work together to solve problems, achieve goals, and relate to one another. Just as business culture is created by default or intentionality, so is a family's culture. There are many strict rules in my family, like do not talking while eating, and can no not eat anything in the bedrooms. One of all these things about my home culture that I wish to change is, "Children are not allowed to sleepover in a friend's house." I believe sleepover is an excellent way for children to experience things like new foods and cultures – and maybe even a completely different way of living, and it also helps children build independence. Sleepovers can enable children to learn new skills – for example, packing clothes, getting ready for bed without mum and dad being around, and overcoming separation anxiety. Without parents there to rely on, children are forced into doing more things for themselves – whether that's asking for a drink or just figuring out where the bathroom is.

The most successful adult I personally know is my former boss, who is the founder of a real estate company. I believe that the most important trait that contributes to his success is ambition. He is very ambitious. Ambitious people will see that they are capable of doing their best and being the best and what they do. If you feel that you are not good enough, or not capable, then you can be unlikely to try and reach your goals of success. Even I really admired my friends to have their own computers, I did not ask for one. On my 14th birthday, my father told me that he had something special for me. I opened the box and found it was a computer! As a young child, that was a long-expected gift my father gave to me, and it's the best present till now. I know it was not easy for my father to buy me this computer from his financial condition, but still, he sacrificed his other joys to make me happy. That was something truly special.

When it comes to something that is popular now and will disappear in the near future, the first thing that jumps into my mind is the USB disk. According to a report released by the United Nations, with the development of technology and the economy, 50 percent of the world's population will be using smartphones and computers. By 2025, mobile data networks will cover 90 percent of the population. With cloud services like Apple, Alicloud Dropbox, Google, and Microsoft offering near-unlimited storage at near-free prices, there will be little need for storage devices taking up room in your pocket. Not to mention the increase in standard storage for mobile devices in the next few years. Despite the fact that USB disks are quite popular nowadays due to their portability, they will soon disappear due to the fact that people don't need them anymore.

Answer

One of the difficult skills I have learned is self-examination. It is the toughest skill to learn because it requires brutal honesty with yourself. A level of honesty you might not be accustomed to. A level you might only be able to attain seeing a therapist or a life coach. Humans are natural learners—and we learn best when we perform the tasks we're trying to learn. No matter how good our grades were at college, most of our learning takes place once we enter the workplace and start applying what we have learned. In order to master this skill, the first thing I do is to know my nature and nurture is the best gift you can offer yourself and others. It is the treasure you are looking for in the quest for truly knowing your strengths, weaknesses, and when you're lying to others and yourself. If you don't know yourself, you might be lying to everyone (including you) without even being aware of it, and it might cause important problems in your life.

Answer

When it comes to a skill that little kids should learn in elementary school, the first thing that jumps into my mind is social skills, and there are several solid reasons contribute to this. Developing social skills in children prepares them for a lifetime of healthier interactions in all aspects of life. Social skills are an integral part of functioning in society. Displaying good manners, communicating effectively with others, being considerate of others' feelings, and expressing personal needs are important components of solid social skills. Good social skills ensure better peer relationships when children grow older. As students develop social skills in school, hence it becomes a part of their behaviours, which helps them in interaction with people from different sectors. Children who have strong social skills are more easily to make friends with others and are proved to be more successful than those who do not.

Better health is essential to human happiness and well-being. It also makes an important contribution to economic progress, as healthy populations live longer, are more productive, and save more. What I do to keep healthy is eating healthy food. Healthy eating has many other benefits. When we eat well, we sleep better, have more energy and better concentration – and this all adds up to healthier, happier lives! Healthy eating should be an enjoyable social experience. When children and young people eat and drink well, they get all the essential nutrients they need for proper growth and development and develop a good relationship with food and other social skills. Getting regular sleep and exercise are other important ways that most people will do to stay healthy. Having late nights can leave you feeling tired the next day. It can be difficult, but try to have at least 8 hours of sleep each night.

Answer

Although the majority of people's use of social media is non-problematic, there is a small percentage of users that become addicted to social networking sites and engage in excessive or compulsive use. Social media addiction is harmful to our physical health as well as mental health. As a precaution, that person should engage in a digital detox, a period of time during which someone significantly reduces the time spent or abstains from using electronic devices such as smartphones or computers. This can include simple steps, such as turning off sound notifications and only checking social media sites once an hour. Other changes can include having periods in the day where there is self-imposed non-screen time, such as during meal times, or leaving the phone in a separate room at night so as not to disturb sleep. In this way, people tend to spend more time with family or friends and can focus on their studies or work, thus having a more successful life.

As one of the world's most ancient civilizations, China is rich in traditions and unique customs. One of the most influential cultures in China is to give a red envelope to children in Chinese New Year. No matter what region or background their families are from, they normally receive red envelopes (lucky money). It usually consists of brand new bills put in a red envelope and given by the family's elders. It represents blessings for the year to come. People tend to stop receiving "hongbao" when they begin to work. Moving to a new culture can be quite an adventure. Whether you relocate for school, work, family, or just for a new experience, getting used to your new home can take time. Instead of wondering if you said something correctly or if you understand a situation properly, just ask. Permitting yourself to make mistakes is also vital. Try to find humour in situations and realize that we all will make mistakes, both yourself and others. It is part of the human experience!

What is a topic that you think journalists should investigate? What do you think they would find? Why would their research be important for people know about?

Your response

Answer

Facial recognition cameras are increasingly being used for control purposes. Whether it is the end of anonymity is a topic that journalists should investigate. It can be found that the facial recognition cameras already come standard in the latest smartphone models: cameras that can recognize faces. In public spaces, too, facial recognition technologies are increasingly in use. Surveillance cameras are being rolled out to help police track down criminals, for example, by automatically comparing the faces of people passing by against photos of criminals from databases. People need to know these findings of the investigations, as it can be an invasion of people's privacy and it's people's right to know if they are being monitored. The facial recognition technologies are being used in the business sector, for example, a software program is currently being developed to scan the faces of customers inside a store and match them up with their profiles on social media. Those who linger over a certain product at a retail store could start receiving digital ads for that product as a result

Taking a half hour after work or on the weekend can get my blood pumping, get the endorphins flowing, and revitalize spirit. I can build muscle, burn calories, and oxygenate the brain—giving me a release after a day of stress. Exercising regularly also helps me remain disciplined, which can be valuable in a demanding work environment, and can reduce the long-term effects of stress as well, meaning regular exercisers tend to be less stressed about their jobs. Do you believe that violence in movies and video games causes violent behavior? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

Nowadays, the controversial issue in relation to the relationship between violent media and violence has drawn great public attention and launched a heated debate. Some worry that there is a direct link, while others are concerned that these kinds of activities simply isolate people or have addictive potential. The biggest fear many players and clinicians have is that exposure to games or visual media with violent content may turn ordinary people, especially kids, into violent people in the real world. As far as I am concerned, exposure to violent content does not necessarily cause violent behaviour. I, personally, have watched many R-rated movies like Parasite, 1917, etc. I have played many violent video games like Fortnite and Battlefield. I play and watch violent media, but I know that it is only entertaining, not something meant to be copied. In fact, I know a kid who plays GTA 5 and he is a nice person. You can consume such media, and still be a good person. Many other developed countries like Japan, UK, and many more have violent media, but their homicide rates are not high, and some are even rather low. It shows that media doesn't necessarily make you violent. The high homicide rates in some countries, America, for instance, can attribute the lack of proper gun control. As for children, if parents are going to show them violent media, tell kids that media is only meant to be entertaining, and that in real life, violence is not okay, and make sure they understand the consequences of real world violence.

Answer

During the course of studying abroad, I had to share an apartment with someone. After 9 years of renting, I had encountered a broad spectrum of people, and sometimes the flatmates could be very different from myself in terms of our characteristics and lifestyle. Therefore, I had to adjust myself to cope with such situation. I am going to talk about my current flatmate. He is rather lazy, and he rarely does cleaning at home. Every time he cooks, he leaves a big mess in the kitchen: sauces, ingredients and cookware all over the bench. When he finishes eating or drinking, he leaves all the cups, plates, bowls and cutleries in the sink. And 9 out 10 times, after washing or drying his clothes, he forgets to take them out of the machine. What's worse, he even uses the washing machine to wash his rugs and cat's accessories, which turns the washing machine into a hair collector. Those things really annoy me, because apart from our separate bedrooms and bathrooms, we share all the other common areas and facilities. This being said, most of the time, my flatmate is a quite nice person, and as I am a caring and moderate person, I usually take care of the mess he has made and never complain to him.

How important do you think it is for people to take risks in life? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Your response

Words:0

Answer

As far as I am concerned, taking risks is rather important because of the reasons outlined below. Most socially confident people deliberately learn specific skills. This means, through practice, we can develop better confidence, equipping us with the right skills to take risks. When we feel shy or afraid of something, we can take action to build more confidence. Instead of accepting ourselves as shy persons, we need to summon up the courage to overcome our fears by facing them. In doing so, we will feel more confident outside of our comfort zone. Taking a risk to achieve a goal requires courage to face the fear of uncertainty. No matter the outcome, either way, we grow through the process and become more resilient and confident. Better yet, building those skills helps in taking more risks and improves the chances of achieving future goals.

I would like to go to the United Kingdom to study. First and foremost, the education system implemented there is better than that in my home country due to the fact that the teaching is more practically oriented, and students are constantly encouraged to think creatively. In addition, there are a number of universities in the UK that are ranked, on average, much higher than those in my home country. This is because they have better teaching resources both in terms of teaching staff and hardware such as equipment and facilities. According to China Daily, 70% of the interviewees who agree with studying abroad at top-ranked universities, have demonstrated better performance at work. Apart from completing a master's degree, during the course of studying overseas, I look forward to accomplishing an internship in a related field in the UK. Personally speaking, the sense of responsibility makes a person worthy of trust. That is to say, a person needs to be a man of his word. He should be honest and punctual. A person does not necessarily need to talk much when he does it carries unparallel weights. Each time he makes a promise, he will fulfil it under any circumstances. And every time he is assigned a task, he will complete it within the given timeframe and to a high standard. This is exactly the way how trust is built. If one cannot keep his promise or accomplish what he is supposed to accomplish, he will be constantly failing others. Consequently, no one will ever trust him.

What do you think is more important—the group or the individual? Provide reasons for why you think the way you do.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

As far as I am concerned, the group is more important than the individual. Firstly, if everybody takes are about just one person, the resources for the rest will be limited. Let's say that you are in a community and you get shot. The amount of medicine is limited and there are many people who have minor injuries. If every resource is used for you exclusively, the other people that have minor injuries will not be cured, therefore even if you are saved, there will be other people whose injury will get worse. That is why the group is more important than just one individual. Secondly, in a community, there will be people who cannot keep up as well as others. In an intermediate math class, for example, there are 20 students. 8 are top students who never need help. 11 are intermediate students that sometimes need help. Then there is 1 student that has no idea what he is doing and needs help all the time. So, the teacher has to spend all the time with the 1 student whilst the other 11 students also need help. The obvious thing to do is to put that 1 student who is not qualified enough to be in the intermediate class into the beginner's group. Not only for the good of the community but also for his own good. Sometimes, it is good for the community to compromise the person that obstructs the vision of the future, but at the same time, it is also good for the person to have gone out.

What do you think is more important, competition or working together? Give reasons to support your opinion.

Your response

Answer

The competitive spirit is a central element of human nature. Competition is not inherently bad. In fact, it can be incredibly fun. However, competition can hold us back from achieving our greatest potential because it is inherently divisive. There can only be one winner. Collaboration, on the other hand, is all about progressing as a whole. There is no winner unless the entire group crosses the finish line together. While a competitive work environment drives results, the way it drives them is by being fear-driven, overworked, and individualistic. Collaborative environments also drive results, but by way of positivity, teamwork, and creativity. Collaboration is bigger than one person. It's a culture. Any staff member, department, or organization should be encouraged to prioritize collaboration over competition. This is because a collaborative culture promotes a better workplace where everyone seems happy, inspired, and genuine. This culture operates under the philosophy that, "we're great". For this group the competitor lies outside the company. Accountability to a set of shared core values and to the company mission inspires people to do their best work.

What does the word home mean to you, beyond simply the building you live in? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Answer

To me, home means not one, but many things. Most importantly, I believe that home means a secure, cheerful place where you are respected and loved. Everybody deserves to know the true meaning of home. Home means an enjoyable, happy place where you can live, laugh and learn. It's somewhere where you are loved, respected, and cared for. When you look at it from the outside, home is just a house. A building. Maybe a yard. But on the inside, it's a lot more than wood and bricks. The saying "Home is where the heart is" says it all. Home is also where your memories lie. Home is where I got my head stuck under the couch. Home is where I fell in the goldfish pond. I remember sleeping in the playhouse, falling down the stairs and climbing up the apple tree. Without memories, most people wouldn't be the people that they are today. Just like memories, home is also where your hopes and dreams are. Dreaming about when you grow up. Being a spaceman or a firefighter. Sinking beneath the sea as a scuba diver. I couldn't imagine living without dreams. My home grounds them, and without a home, I wouldn't have any.

If you had unlimited resources, what is a medical problem you would want to solve? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Your response

Answer

Form a patient's perspective, I would argue that the most pressing medical problem is to improve the doctor-patient relationship, regardless of the number of resources it would take. That is to say, the medical industry should try its best to deal with patients' most basic complaints. Nowadays, hospitals and health care organizations are using too many gimmicks when it comes to improving patient satisfaction and enhancing the patient experience. These include things such as flashy surveys, customer service agents, and computer apps. Forget these. Why not just listen to your patients' most basic complaints? Two of these would be getting a good night's sleep and tastier food! These are by far the two biggest complaints that I hear each and every day. Hospitals everywhere are failing to grasp the fact that what patients want is really quite simple. The list would also include more time with their doctors. It's not rocket science. Listen, learn and create the right hospital environment.

What is one thing about how you were raised that you do not agree with? Explain the reasons for your opinion.

Your response

Answer

I was raised in a culture where many things were deemed inappropriate for children to do, and the ban on dating is the one I disagree the most with. Although for the most part, I agree that high school students aren't in the best age to start dating because of possible distraction for a chance to change your future to be a better one. But I strongly disagree that it needs to be banned. High school students being teenagers and have experienced their fair share of life's issues, so they would have better judgemental abilities and do the right things even if they were to be dating. Students would have the self-discipline to not let dating affect their studies, and children can even learn a lesson from the relationship, such as how to take care of others etc. If the restriction was to be removed, my life during high school would probably be sweeter as I would have already tasted the fruit of love. Dating a gorgeous girl would have greatly relieved the heavy burden of study during those pedestrian school days, especially the bleakest final exam periods. If, by any chance, that was a healthy relationship that she and I have maintained all the way along till now, as I am mature enough now, we would probably have seen each other's families and planned to take the next step - marriage.

What is the most important thing you have learned from your parents, both bad and good? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

Many of life's lessons must be learned by actually experiencing the messy stuff of life, but some of the most important lessons are best learned from our parents. Parents are often a person's greatest teachers, and these lessons are some of the most essential ones. The most important lesson I have learned from my parents is that I should pursue what I truly love. Spending my days doing what I am passionate about, and I'll find plenty of fulfillment. The luckiest people can pursue what they love as a career, but even if that's not an option, my parents taught me it is important to have hobbies. Only when people are doing what they have passion about, they can totally dedicate to it and hence achieve their maximum efficiency. Because from deep inside, people genuinely want the things they are doing to be the best. This lesson is great because it helped me determine which career to pursue during my bleakest time. And now I am much more determined about my future.

Do you think that people are actually able to change, or are they only able to act like they have changed? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

Surely there are things about people that they themselves don't like or are not liked by others, so they change them. Nonetheless, sometimes it's more likely that the people keep on doing them, even though they said they would like to change them. There is an old saying, "A leopard can't change its spots." Well, it is virtually true in the animal world, but we people don't necessarily see the same pattern. To me, this is more of a philosophical or psychology issue or probably a bit of both, and it can get rather complicated. Hereby, I'll just express my personal thoughts. Firstly, "personality" is a word used to describe traits that are consistent across time and place. For example, we expect a highly extraverted person to be outgoing at home, at work, and at school. While personality is not a perfect predictor of behavior, it does give us a general idea of how someone is likely to think and act. In this sense, people are less likely to be able to change, instead, they can just act as they have changed in order to fit into the environment. On the other hand, when it comes to the way people behave and think, personally speaking, people are able to change. However, people can't just snap their fingers and say goodbye to well-established patterns, even when those patterns result in bad consequences, because those patterns have been shaped since we were young. People are so used to behaving and thinking in a particular way that the change will require extensive effort and will be quite time-consuming. We cannot expect to see the change take place any time soon. It is usually a slow process, and is highly dependent on one's commitment, and it takes perseverance.

The place I desire to live has changed from Tier 1 cities to a city that is not far away from my hometown, so that I can also travel back to home on holidays to look after my parents. To achieve my goals, firstly I need to work hard to study my professional knowledge. Moreover, I should conduct the research on which skills and qualifications are required in the current labor market to help me stand out in future employment. Answer

From my point of view, the most important thing humans can do for the environment is to reduce the carbon footprint from an individual perspective. The increasing carbon dioxide has caused a series of problems, such as rising temperature and poisonous smog. To be more specific, we can reduce the usage of unrecycled plastic in our daily life, such as plastic bags and plastic cookware. Moreover, rather than driving private cars, choosing public transportations can reduce the emission of exhaust fumes, in turn, we will have clean air to breath. Through our efforts, the carbon footprint caused by burning waste can be reduced significantly, which contributes to a better environment.

From my point of view, coding is the subject that not required by schools but is necessary for all current students. Since students are heavily relying on computers for study, basic coding can enable them to understand how to use the software efficiently. When they graduate and work, they still need to use computers no matter what their occupation are. Even with further study, they may develop the software specifically for their profession. Looking into the future, almost all the cutting edge of technology is relevant to computer science, so building up interest and knowledge in schools is important for students to follow the trend.

Speaking of an unusual food I have ever eaten, it must be the baked snails. When I was travelling to France with my family for the first time, we were shocked when we saw there was a cuisine called baked snails on the menu. We have never eaten snails before and could not imagine how it would be tasted like. But the waiter highly recommended it saying it is a signature cuisine for their restaurant. Doubtfully, we ordered the baked snails. I have to admit that the taste surprised me as it is soft and mixed well with the red wine. Through this experience, I learnt that trying new things sometimes can give us unexpected surprises.

There are definitely some subjects of issues should be off-limits for writers and comedians. For instance, some arguments may exacerbate ethnic tensions. Although writers are supposed to have the rights of free speech, they cannot express discriminable opinions since their work have wide influences on readers. Even in some cases, the comedians make arbitrary comments only based on their subject experiences. Their expression may offend others who are in the opposite position. As public figures, writers and comedians should pay more attention to their contents and expressions. They can present their opinion but under the premise that does not hurt other's feeling.

From my perspective, the most important trait for successful business owners is creativity, which is the start point of their entrepreneurship. For the operation of the business, they need to be willing to take risks in this challenging business world. Moreover, entrepreneurs cannot only focus on the current situation, but they should also be future-oriented. By analyzing the market trend and business characters, they can find the opportunity and expand their business. All these traits are also necessary for my life improvement since my whole life can be compared to a business that needs to be operated. From my perspective, a requirement on following a dress code on the job is a good thing since a dress code allows an employer to set expectations regarding the image it wants the company to convey to partners, clients and public. To be more specific, a law firm with employees all wearing suits shows an image that they are professional and accountable in the field compared to those wearing T-shirts and shorts. Moreover, the standard for dress codes creates a standard for visual cohesion. This allows employees to feel part of a group and have a feeling of all working toward one purpose.

As far as I am concerned, dreams reveal unconscious desires and wishes. There is an old Chinese saying: "What you think about in the day, you will dream of it at night." Dreams about flying are experienced by many. They can be exciting and even liberating but they can sometimes be quite frightening, especially for those afraid of heights. Such dreams often represent two very different sides. On the one hand, such dreams can represent feelings of freedom and independence. On the other hand, they can also indicate a desire to flee or escape from the realities of life. Because it often involves positive feelings of pleasure, flying may represent a deep desire for freedom from social norms and restraints. The things you experience in your dreams are probably a reflection of the concerns you face in your daily existence. That is to say, dreams may be considered as a reflection of your waking life, mirroring your fears, anxieties, desires, hopes, and aspirations for the future.

Why do you think that people tend to look up to famous people so much? Explain your reasoning.

Your response

Words:0

Re-practice Submit

Answer

People nowadays tend to look up to famous people very much due to various reasons. In my opinion, the first and foremost reason is that celebrities have one or more traits that average people desire deeply, ranging from attractive appearance, luxury lifestyle to strong capability. People admire, idolize and worship celebrities, because they consider the latter as important, powerful or famous, and because a great number of people know about the latter. Celebrities appear on the media, which allows people to peek into their lives. They seem to live a different and more interesting lifestyle than average people, or so the media makes the public think. There is a subconscious desire in the human race to idolize anything that seems better, greater, richer, well known or powerful. There is a tendency to worship anything that seems glamorous, fascinating or powerful. People all want to live a different and better life, and reading about celebrities, watching them on TV, or following them on Instagram and other social networks, makes average people feel that that they are participating and taking part in celebrities' glory. Just so average people feel closer to celebrities, as if celebrities are their friends, and this gives them a good feeling.

How much time using technology do you think is too much time? Provide reasons to support your answer.

Your response

Answer

Technology usage has skyrocketed over the past decade. People have reached the point as a society where there's less argument about whether tech addiction is real, whether we're spending too much time on digital devices. The conversation has shifted to what all of us - tech companies, parents keeping their children's tech use in check, and each user individually - should do about it. Too much screen time might interfere with opportunities to gain greater benefits that experiencing a larger variety of activities offers. When it comes to recreational screen time for kids and teens, I would say 1-2 hours on school days is a reasonable amount. On weekends and holidays, perhaps 3-4 hours of recreational screen time is a reasonable amount. On the other hand, for adults, as much of the work today involves the use of technology, I would say 6 hours per day for average workers and 8 to 10 hours per day for workers in the IT industry. This being said, any further usage of technology will be deemed as too much.

I read about a strange news story last week which is kind of funny. A man in France has accidentally blown up part of his house while trying to chase a fly with an electric swat. The man, in his 80s, was eating his dinner on Friday evening when he became annoyed at a fly buzzing around him. He then picked up the electronic fly swat and took aim at it, as he was unaware of a gas cylinder leaking at his home. A reaction occurred between the swat and the gas, causing an explosion and part of his kitchen to blow up. The blast also damaged a section of his roof and the house is currently uninhabitable. Somehow the man managed to escape the catastrophe with just a burn to his hand. As to why this story made the news, I suppose it was because no such thing had ever happened before - a coincidentally weird but highly dangerous incident resulted from an ordinary, daily practice with a surprising ending. What people can learn from the story is that they should always keep an eye on their living environment and keep it at an absolutely safe level.

When it comes to the biggest difference between my best friend and me, I suppose it is our tastes. My best friend William is a savoury person, while I have an extremely sweet tooth. This is what makes going out to eat so easy between the two of us. He can eat the leftovers I don't want, and I know that I'll never have to fight over the last bite of chocolate cake – it's all mine. There have been many TV shows I've fallen in love with just because William introduced me to them. I probably never would have even known about them before. Luckily, I have someone who inspires my TV watch list. In fact, he got me into watching the Game of Thrones just by talking about it on social media so much. Sharing music is one of the greatest things ever. I love discovering new music, but it's always so hard to do so on my own. That's why it's fun to have a bestie who has a different taste in music. I can always count on William to introduce me to new tunes. Because of the difference between our tastes, we have forged a rather solid relationship. We learn about the latest trends and decent restaurants, which greatly enrich both of our lives.

Let me narrate an interesting incident. It was a fine Friday morning on December 9th at my office. Our team decided to take a coffee break. So, we headed to office pantry when one other colleague, Jack, who was just this morning back from Indonesia after a week-long business trip, has also arrived. Instead of the regular coffee, he offered us a special world's most expensive coffee he bought from Indonesia. After we all drank the coffee and agreed that it tasted better than what we used to have, Jack smiled and explained the procedure of its production. We looked at each other in silence. A couple of us were about to vomit. Because we just had coffee made with half-digested coffee beans, extracted from the poop of an animal from wilds of Indonesia. Our excitement was gone, and we were thinking what we should do with what was still left in our cups. I could not dare myself to finish it, and with an apology washed it off in the sink. We were all smiling, laughing and making fun of each other's facial expressions. So, whatever you may say, I would never like to drink this thing again, not even if I was offered a lot of money to drink it for one week.

Name an important quality for politicians to have. Why do you think this quality improves how politicians do their job? Would it be good for everyone to have these qualities?

Your response

Answer

Politicians are expected to accomplish different tasks than ordinary citizens. They might therefore be expected to possess certain traits and skills to engage in a leading position, to work effectively with the public, or to communicate through news media. As a consequence, citizens want candidates to exhibit certain required traits to a larger or lesser degree than they exhibit themselves. As far as I am concerned, trustworthy is one of the most important qualities for successful politicians. Politicians always have simple, straightforward plans for big changes and include citizens in them. If people vote for a candidate with a big plan, they have contributed to the lofty goal. If they are promised a big goal will be met and it doesn't happen, the backlash can be horrible. When politicians are proven to be wrong or lying, they are considered far less trustworthy, and citizens will lose faith in the government, which will lead to a range of worse consequences. It would be great for everyone to have this quality as truth is the rock foundation of healthy relationships.

Usually, I am overwhelmed after a full schedule of classes, so I go to the convenience store opposite my school to get some refreshments. There I can also chat with my classmates for a while as the store always attracts numerous students with its large variety of snacks. After getting home, I first unpack my backpack, taking out all the assignments that I need to complete by the end of the day so that I can get a rough idea of how much time I will need to spend on them. If the weather allows, then I get changed and go outside to play some sports, either riding a bicycle or playing basketball. A bit of exercise is necessary for a healthy life. And I really enjoy the feeling of sweating. After that, I go home to take a shower. Then I turn on my computer either to play the trending music playlist or the TV series I like until dinner time. Having dinner with the family is always a pleasure as we get to share what we have experienced during the day with each other. After dinner, I go back to my room to do my assignments. If I can finish them early, I can still go to watch TV with my parents. Typically, 10 o'clock is my bedtime. In terms of the activity, I would like to add to my routine, I will probably choose to help my mum with chores around the house, for instance, doing dishwashing after dinner.

Answer

I was pretty much blessed in every way to have the most supportive, loving, understanding parents. In China, parents usually make it an unwritten rule that their kids get involved in one activity or job whether the kids want to or not. But my parents encouraged me to follow my own dreams and supported me 200% of the way. When I was only seven, I was already super interested in music, but my family wasn't that wealthy. My mom enrolled me in piano lessons and eventually found an affordable piano to have at home. My parents went to every single music event and supported me. This inspired me to follow my dreams. Their hard work resulted not only in a comfortable home, solid healthy meals on the table day in day out, clothes, cars, extracurricular expenses, etc. I thank them by learning really hard, and eventually got excellent grades in every subject learnt at school. The most important thing I have learnt from my parents is the value of hard work to follow my dreams and strive to make the most of opportunities available. I feel privileged to have the most amazing, wonderful parents!

Answer

In China, school days usually start at 8 or even earlier. Many parents are having trouble getting their children up in the morning. And it is not uncommon to see teens fall asleep during the school days. Many adolescents struggle to wake up early for school. It has sparked a discussion about the pros and cons of starting school at a later time. While some people may think that teens are just lazy for not getting up early, others urge schools to consider later start times so that adolescents can get adequate sleep. As far as I am concerned, it's better for the school days to start later. First of all, simply delaying school by 30 minutes to 1 hour can have a dramatic impact on teens' health and performance. Delayed start time could help teens sleep during their natural sleep or wake cycles. And thus teens may be more likely to get the recommended amount of sleep, which in turn will lower their dependency on caffeine to stay awake during school days. Apart from that, getting home later in the afternoon, as a result of the delayed start of school days, may reduce the amount of time some teens are home alone, and could decrease the likelihood they will engage in unhealthy or unsafe activities.

Answer

When it comes to a school subject that I think all students should be required to take, I would pick English. The first reason for choosing English to be a compulsory subject in school is that English is one of the most commonly used languages worldwide, and it is the official language of most of the world's most influential countries, such as America and the UK. What's more, globalization has made all countries inextricably linked. This means that it has become far more essential than ever for an individual to master English. Learning English has a number of benefits. Firstly, employment opportunity doors open for those have learnt English. The better employment opportunities in turn have a knock-on effect of higher salaries. English-speaking people are in high demand at global companies. Secondly, English is the official language of the art, and media world. The largest film industry in the world, Hollywood produces films in English. It is always best to appreciate an international work of art in its original language. Learning English will enable viewers to watch them without subtitles.

Answer

Buying a house has long been a staple of the Chinese dream - go to college, get a job, get married, buy a house, and have some kids. Home buying is just one of the things I have to check off the list in order to be considered a grown-up. So, homeownership is my priority if I won one million dollars. Another major reason supporting my purchase is that investing in property is a proven path to long-term wealth. This means that I would have to choose a property that is highly likely to increase in value. My parents would probably be in favour of my purchase as one of the biggest wishes of typical Chinese parents is their children's settlement in capital cities, and a good settlement involves the ownership of a decent house. The past decade has seen the soaring of housing price in China's capital cities, and it is highly unlikely that the price would drop in another couple of decades. Therefore, having a house in major cities would give me long-term financial benefits. I will either have a place to live in or have a considerable amount of extra income by renting the house out.
