I was pretty much blessed in every way to have the most supportive, loving, understanding parents. In China, parents usually make it an unwritten rule that their kids get involved in one activity or job whether the kids want to or not. But my parents encouraged me to follow my own dreams and supported me 200% on the way. When I was only seven, I was already super interested in music, but my family wasn't that rich. My mom enrolled me in piano lessons and eventually found an affordable piano to have at home. My parents went to every single music event and supported me. This inspired me to follow my dreams. Their hard work contributed not only to a comfortable home, solid healthy meals on the table day in day out, clothes, cars, extracurricular expenses, etc. I thank them by learning really hard, and eventually got excellent grades in every subject learnt at school, which made my parents genuinely proud of me. And now, because of my proficiency in piano, I can play a piece of music to welcome every guest who comes to my place and help them better enjoy the stay.

Answer

When it comes to the underpaid profession, the first one that comes into my mind is the nurse. It is an indisputable fact that nurses play vital roles in taking care of patients. They are using their professional expertise to facilitate the healing process when people get sick or injured, assisting surgeons to carry out the surgery, and so forth. Apart from doctors, nurses help ensure people's health both physically and mentally. Many of them have to work night shifts to serve existing and potential patients. Without nurses, taking surgeries and hospitalization would be horrible experiences for patients. Nonetheless, nurses aren't getting paid enough, especially those whose job involves heavy-duty and requires them to stay 100% focused throughout the shift. Nurses are assuming massive responsibility as one simple mistake could trigger deadly consequences. In this sense, I reckon nurses should be paid more.

Answer

We've seen plenty of predictions that robots are about to put everyone, from factory workers to journalists, out of a job, with blue collar work most vulnerable to automation. In my opinion, robots will result in a great number of people losing their jobs. Labour-intensive industries such as manufacturing or agriculture rather than talent-based industries such as law or journalism will see the highest robotization. And it's lower-skilled people who may have moved from the former industries who are vulnerable. In other words, the more repetitive the job, the greater the risk of its being wiped out. While it sees the robots moving out of the factories and into service industries, it's still in manufacturing that they will have the most impact, particularly in China where armies of workers could be replaced by machines. On the other hand, jobs which require more compassion, creativity or social intelligence are more likely to continue to be carried out by humans for decades to come. Nevertheless, it's still a considerable number of people that will substituted by robots.

Answer

The freedom of speech and the ability of government to regulate it have been a controversial issue for centuries. Personally speaking, people should be allowed to say what they want, provided they are prepared to accept any consequences for their choice of words. This is because you can't ask to be protected from how people react to your point of view. The reactions of others cannot be controlled. Despite the reaction of others to what you say, it is commonly argued that everyone deserves the right to speak their mind, reject, protest and refuse. Freedom of speech is a fundamental part of art criticism, cultural criticism, and protects the right to protest and fight against what we don't want, and to argue for what we do. We need to have opposing views co-existing with one another to free our minds and challenge us. We shouldn't allow ourselves to let 'political correctness' make us afraid of sharing views that can contribute to critiquing our culture. Freedom of speech is the gateway to being able to question consensus, and to challenge what is being presented as truth. I think it's everyone's right to share their investigations and critiques, to challenge the cultural consensus.

I had never tried skiing before because I was too scared to do so, but I did it anyway last winter. My best friend, William, asked me if I would like to go skiing with him and a group of his friends. I didn't give him my response straightaway. Instead, I had a thorough thought over that plan for a couple of days because I had never skied before, and I hardly knew any of the other people in the group. Finally, I made my mind – I decided to join them and leave all the concerns behind. I suppose the biggest driver was my will to try playing extreme sports. If, for any reason, I had chosen otherwise, I suppose that I would regret so much. Because I experienced the great fun of skiing and viewed the amazingly gorgeous scenery of the snow mountain. Besides, I wouldn't have met so many amazing people who have taken good care of me and taught me how to ski. Apart from the skiing skill, I also learnt that I should step out of my comfort zone and try things that I haven't experienced before as I only live once.

When it comes to the book that has influenced me the most, the first one that jumps into my mind is the Harry Potter series written by J.K. Rowling. Despite his strong magic, Harry Potter is a true hero as he is willing to stand up for people who are in need. This quality is what I have always been aiming at. Harry has always been on the side of protecting vulnerable group and justice. For example, if someone is bullied, then he will correct what is wrong by using the magic to appropriately punish the protagonist. It is Harry's bravery of protecting disadvantaged people and doing justice that inspires me. Although it is impossible for me to have magic, my ambition will never change. And in order to stand up for people who I love, I will continue to pursue strength and whatever it takes to live a secure and happy life.

Answer

To be happy we need to have enough money to cover our basic needs. Worrying about having enough money to put food on the table, or being able to pay medical bills in case a family member falls ill, is highly stressful, and can negatively affect happiness levels. But the bottom line is that money can't buy it all. In fact, there are many things which are vital to our happiness and well-being that simply can't be bought. Money can buy lust, attraction, power and so forth, but it can't buy love. This is because love is something intimate; something heartfelt; something mysterious. Money is none of these things. Money is simply a method of exchange – no more and no less. It's used to pay for a product or a service; its convenience, comfort, and luxury. One funny thing about love is that having too much money may even pose a difficulty in getting true love. For example, Everyone wants to associate with a wealthy person, due to this, it would be complicated to find true love since you may not be able to differentiate between the people who love you for who you are and those who love for what you have. Also, having money may help you in making good memories with your loved ones, but in the absence of love, all the money in the world cannot build a stable relationship. Thus, money can't buy love.

Answer

Man in the Mirror is a song with lyrics that I find deeply meaningful. It is a song by one of the greatest artists in human history – Michael Jackson. Although sadly, he died at an early age, he has left us a large number of works among which many are considered classic. The philosophy Michael shares in this song is very inspiring. This song creates a realization of our reality today. We can't keep complaining, or painfully watching people suffer. We must be unselfish and assist those who require assistance. An important line from the song is "If you want to make the world a better place, take a look at yourself, and then make a change." We always talk about our society and all the bad things that happen that have no reasoning. And that someone could be right in the mirror. There is a quote that perfectly represents this song, "Our world suffers a lot, not because of the bad people and, the violence. But, because of the good people that are silent." In the song, he urges us to stop being selfish and extend our kindness to others, especially those who are in desperate need. That's why I consider this song to be one of the most meaningful songs created by the one and only Michael Jackson that no one will ever forget, and may his legacy be passed down to future generations to come.

Answer

As far as I am concerned, the most important quality for a student to have is an inquiring mind. It is an indisputable fact that the majority of students nowadays have stopped thinking while learning. They are increasingly inclined to learn by rote, which is definitely not the most effective approach of learning. Students should be constantly encouraged to think creatively and critically. In doing so, they can understand the knowledge to a greater depth, and in turn apply what they have learnt from the textbooks to the real world. In order to develop an inquiring mind, I always take the initiative to read around the subjects outside of the classroom, research more about a theory I touched on in class, talk about the concepts in my personal statement. It not only demonstrates a curious mind, but also a positive attitude to study, an interest in my course and an ability to think and work independently.

What are the most important qualities to look for in a friend? Explain why these qualities are more important than others.

Camera

Re-practice

Submit

Answer

Research has shown that the better the quality of your relationships, the more likely you are to be happy. So, being a great friend to someone and having friends support your back is good for your wellbeing. Trustworthiness is often the "make or break" element in any interpersonal relationship. Any breach, regardless of perceived magnitude, can devastate a relationship. Trustworthiness is comprised of several components, including honesty, dependability, and loyalty, and while each is important to successful relationships, honesty and dependability have been identified as the most vital in the realm of friendships. Honesty requires that we speak openly from the heart and incorporate objectivity into our words. Being dependable means that friends can count on you to be there when you say you will, to do what you say you will, and to be willing to stand up for friends, especially when they can't stand up for themselves. If you are as likely to let friends down as come through for them, the relationship often becomes superficial, less engaging, and even resentment-provoking, if it doesn't end altogether. Loyalty is valued early on in all of our relationships, from the time we make our first friendships. We need friends who won't spill our secrets to others, gossip about us, or allow others to criticize us.

Decisions I have to make within a team are difficult, only because these decisions take more time and require deliberate communication between team members. The last time I made a difficult choice was in last year. I was working on a team project at university, and my teammate and I had to make some choices about how to successfully launch a new product into the market with limited budget. I would like to maximize the quality of our product while compromising on the marketing because I believed customers would ultimately come to buy your product if it was genuinely good. On the contrary, he insisted to put great efforts into marketing, saying that's how a new product was supposed to be launched into an existing market and then gradually gain market share. After a long debate, I compromised, and we arrived at the same decision that the majority of the limited budget should be put into the marketing of our new product. During the heated negotiation, we were able to see each other's unique understanding of the project. At the end of the day, the project reinforced our relationship, and we became good study partners over the rest of the course.

At the end of every year, I would like to set a goal for myself that I can achieve in the future. For the coming year, one goal I want to achieve is to find a decent job so that I can be financially independent from my parents. Next year would be my last year at university, so finding a job is necessary. To achieve this goal, first of all, I need to accumulate my practical experience in the professional fields through internships. Moreover, it is ideal for me to check which skills are looked after by current employers, therefore, I can improve those skills directly to be successful in employment. Do you believe that there are times when it is right to lie, or do you think all lying is wrong? Explain your reasoning.

Camera

Answer

From my perspective, not all lying is wrong because there are also white lies which are from good considerations. The most reasonable point for my argument is that sometimes when people are lying, they are trying to minimize the effects caused by the cruel truth. For instance, before the entrance exam of the university, some parents may choose not to tell their children that they are going to divorce. From the parents' perspective, the most important task for their children is to pass the entrance exam, so they decide to tell this lie just to minimize the negative effects caused by the cruel truth. Moreover, in daily life, some lies are insignificant and do not harm anyone's interest, such as 'it is a tasty cheesecake' when the cheesecake is just plain. It is not easy to define which statement is absolutely right or absolutely wrong in actual world so we cannot judge decisively whether it is a lie.

From my perspective, the most important thing humans can do for the environment is to reduce the carbon footprint from individual aspects. The increasing carbon dioxide has caused a series of problems, like rising temperature and poisonous smog, which have caused severe problems in our daily life. Actually, there are lots of behaviors we can change to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. To be more specific, we can reduce the usage of unrecycled plastic in our daily life, such as plastic bags and plastic cookware. Moreover, rather than driving private cars, choosing public transportations can reduce the emission of exhaust fumes, in turn, we will have clean air to breath. Through our efforts, the carbon footprint caused by burning waste can be reduced significantly, which can contribute to a better environment. Efforts can also be made by what and how much we eat. From my perspective, people can definitely make a difference in terms of climate change. The first and most important reason for my argument is that individual activities can contribute to a significant change in the environment, which has already happened. For instance, after the public transportation and electric vehicles being encouraged by the government, the smog phenomena in large cities have been eased without doubts. Under the strong enforcement of appropriate legislation, the usage of plastic bags has been reduced to a large extent. Moreover, there are more and more people developing the awareness that it is our responsibility to protect the environment while taking resource from it. Answer

From my point of view, I reckon that most people are untrustworthy. The first reason for my argument is that it is reasonable to believe that everyone is living in their own interests. Therefore, if there are conflicts of interests, they are more likely to fight for their own interests. Moreover, in current society, competition is so fierce that people may need to sacrifice other's interest to survive no matter in study, work, or life. For instance, if two employees are the candidates for one team leader position, that other two cannot trust each other on work. What's more, the relationship among people become gradually distant in modern society, so people lack empathy and don't care about others too much. They tend to not make commitments or fail to fulfil the commitment. In conclusion, with all the reasons mentioned about, I consider most people as untrustworthy.

Answer

From my point of view, the first thing I will notice about a person is his or her dressing. From the cloth they are wearing, I can speculate their age, job and maybe personality. To be more specific, if a man is wearing suits, it is reasonable to believe that he may be working in a company as a manager. On the other hand, a man wearing fashion brands is more likely to work on clothing or fashion industry. According to my experience, a woman who wears light colour is commonly more easy-going than who wears a dark colour. Moreover, in some specific occasions, the appropriate dressing can also reflect whether the person value this meeting. For instance, attending a business meeting with formal clothing can show your professionalism and respects to counterparts. A person who can wear cloth suitable for different occasion tends to have high EQ and pay great attention to details. In conclusion, the two aspects mentioned above are the reasons why I consider clothing as the most important factor for the first impression.

Among all the genres of film or literature, historical drama is definitely my favorite. Some historical dramas focus more on how to recreate the original scenes of a certain period, while other dramas tend to combine some fictional factors with history. For example, it may talk about a college student, who likes researching history, and occasionally travels back to ancient times and has a magical experience. My collection of historical dramas is ranging from stories in ancient Chinese dynasties to European kingdoms. The Kangxi Dynasty is a historical television drama that I keep watching for more than three times. It depicts the lifetime of a legendary emperor on how he was dedicated to developing a country from military, agriculture and business aspects. The fantasy costume and grand setting specifically designed make me more involved into that drama. While learning history, I can also feel the relations and feelings among characters, such as the pressure in royal family and trust between the emperor and generals.

There are many factors that can contribute to a person's success. From my point of view, education and positive attitude are two of the most important factors for success. In terms of education, the highest paid people are those who know more cutting-edge knowledge than the average. Therefore, they are valued more by the employers and ultimately earn more money. Especially in today's society, it is clear that education becomes increasingly important. It enables you to acquire the essential knowledge and skills. When it comes to the other necessary factor, positive attitude can help us get through the tough time quickly and transform the risks into opportunities. Everyone will meet difficulties when they are pursuing goals. We need to think positively so that we don't give up easily. Moreover, people are more willing to work with you if you are confident and optimistic. In conclusion, I consider the education and positive attitude as the most important factors towards success.

From my perspective, people are more motivated by the fear of failure rather than the desire to succeed. The first reason for my argument is that people only need to meet the minimum standard if their goal is not failing, therefore, they need fewer efforts and it is easier to start. But it requires more efforts to succeed, which is more likely to frighten people to give up. Specifically, most students study to pass the exam but only small a proportion of them are willing to spend more time to get a high distinction. Moreover, when facing the possibility of failure, people start to worry about the significant loss after failure. By contrast, the results of not successful are not serious compared to that of failure. In conclusion, it is reasonable to believe that people tend to be motivated by the fear of failure due to fewer efforts needed, and serious results failure caused.

Sometimes what we experience in dreams is so real that we can even remember when we wake up and it reflects what burdens us in daily life. To be more specific, if the deadline of an exam is approaching, we tend to dream of getting up late so that missing the exam or leaving the materials at home. This is because we keep worrying about the exam, and even when we sleep, we still make our nerves tense. And family member who has passed away always appear in our dreams, which is an expression that we still miss them and cherish the memory. In other cases, the dream may be in contrast to reality. For instance, in real life, we may not have the courage to try the skydiving, but we may find ourselves are enjoying the air and excitement of skydiving in dreams. This can tell us that, in our deep inner world, we are really eager to do these activities.

Though he can't manage every aspect of our family due to his age, yet he is still the decision-maker for our family, and every single decision he has ever made involves a great level of kindness towards every other person. I remember him from my early childhood when he used to play chess with me. He taught me many things including the value of kindness. He told me some of his great adventures in his life through stories and those stories are still inspiring for me. He is a person of his word. He would not talk much but when he does it carries unparallel weights. He is a benevolent person as I have seen him helping many people in our locality. We never take his kindness for granted, instead, we very much appreciate all the things he has done for us. I revere my grandfather for his acute observation and great decisions. I like him so much that I want to become a person like him.

Answer

The last group project I completed in school was a project report for the subject called Construction. The entire class was divided into groups of six by our subject coordinator, ensuring that each group had a mix of students from different backgrounds in an attempt to best simulate the real-life workplaces. I am from China, and was assigned to a group with two Indians, one American and two Australians. In order to work together smoothly, the very first thing we did was to introduce yourself to the rest of the team, including your strengths, weaknesses and your favourite part of the group assignment to do. After knowing each one's personalities, roughly, of course, we elected a team leader to coordinate our teamwork. Then we divided the report into several sub-sections, delegated two members to each task, and set up a timeframe. We also created a Facebook group to communicate instantly with each other. Probably because the way we cooperated and peer pressure, we each finished our own parts within the given time and to the required quality. From the group project, I learnt that I am more of a follower rather than the team leader, and I have excellent attention to detail which enables me to complete every single task with very little or no error.

Do you think that prison is the best consequence for criminals, or do you believe there's a better way? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Answer

Imprisonment is an increasingly common method of punishment in modern society, it is designed to punish the offender by depriving them of their liberty. In reality, however, imprisonment is under constant debate and has many critics, leading us to question its effectiveness. Prison usually involves indignity, physical discomfort, psychological pain and general unhappiness, as well as impairing future prospects of employment and social integration upon release. However, as far as I am concerned, imprisonment may not be the best punishment in many cases. Some offenders who are not a direct danger to the general public should not be put into prison. For instance, some career criminals resort to crime because they were seeking more profitable opportunity than honest work provides. And even taking them out of society for a short 1 year without a work-history and a criminal record on top of it, makes it more difficult for them to get an honest job than it was before they had a record in the first place. In these cases, imprisonment is not encouraging them to correct their wrong. And I believe there is a better way to punish these criminals. Nevertheless, there are many other types of criminals who definitely deserve imprisonment.

I have attended many parties on different occasions but the most memorable one was a party that I held to mark my elder sister's twenty-fifth birthday. It was a surprise party that I planned with the help of my mother. It was on the twenty-fifth of September last year, and I had started to plan it a week ahead. After my sister left for work in the morning, I started decorating our house and installing the setup. My mother started baking the birthday cake and cooking. I had also contacted all my sister's close friends and our relatives beforehand and asked them to come to our place before 6, which was the time my sister finished work. The celebration commenced at the very moment my sister stepped into the house while we surprised her by pulling the crackers. She was literally frightened but was soon overwhelmed by happiness. We then socialized and enjoyed an incredible dinner. I am sure everyone had an amazing time at the party.

Answer

Keeping a unique pet will surely give its owner an exceptional experience, but there certainly will be various associated concerns which the owner has to deal with. Also, the owner will need to assume a huge responsibility. I am going to briefly introduce you to keeping a hedgehog as a pet. Despite their spines, hedgehogs are incredibly friendly, and they can become extremely affectionate with owners. Hedgehogs are rather cute, and they make perfect pets since they are calm and need low maintenance. But bear that in mind: they require lots of attention, especially when they are small. As long as you are gentle and show no harm to hedgehogs, they will not use their spines against you. Before you buy a hedgehog, make sure you check the legislation in your area. Hedgehogs are nocturnal, so if you are not a night owl, it is better to choose another unusual pet.

As far as I am concerned, the biggest benefit of having constant access to the internet is that it largely facilitates people's study. 20 years ago, whenever I wanted to learn about something, I had to ask someone or to visit the local library. Things are so different now, and even though having access to the internet is just a part of daily life, it still is amazing. I can learn pretty much anything online. There are experts and experienced people sharing knowledge freely online. It is easy for people to get caught up in the busyness of life. We often take things for granted and fail to notice and appreciate the abundance and there is always something to be thankful for in our lives. Therefore, we need to appreciate the things around us, and my way to show thankfulness is to say "thank you" to those who share good stuff online.

My favorite school subject is physics, and there are a number of reasons. Firstly, physics teaches people how to think. Humans are naturally inclined to take the easy road and just make assumptions based on emotions and beliefs, rather than making decisions based on the facts presented. In fact, it takes a lot of practice to train our brains to think critically. Secondly, physics explains. There is a broad spectrum of physics theories of relativity turned out to fundamentally change the way we look at space and time. These theories answered so many questions. Physically woven into the fabric of space and time, physics surrounds us everyday, giving us ample space to stop and consider what it is we are really experiencing. So many aspects of our daily lives revolve around the laws of physics. Besides, physics is a wonderful tool for math. It takes all these numbers and symbols and puts them into real world use.

Organized, well-structured youth sports and on-going physical activities can provide many benefits for people. The most important thing I do to stay healthy is to exercise on a regular basis. My father taught me this behaviour and helped tailor an exercise plan for me to stick with. Basically, I have to be physically active for 30 minutes most days of the week. I break this up into three 10-minute sessions when pressed for time. Healthy movement may include walking, jogging, stretching or other activities I enjoy and feel like to perform in different cases. Exercise is important because it can help me reach my fitness goals and maintain a healthy weight. However, it also encourages healthy decision-making such as not smoking and not drinking. Sports also have hidden health benefits such as lowering the chance of a number of diseases.

We tend to look for ourselves in our favourite superheroes. They inspire us to take action, to do justice, to stand for what's right. As a woman, I appreciate seeing a female on the front of a Marvel movie poster for a change. Captain Marvel is everything that I admire: determined, strong, just, and willing to be vulnerable. She doesn't let others tell her who she is or what she can do, but discovers those things for herself. Though another character tells her, "Your emotions make you weak," she soon learns otherwise—that women aren't lesser beings and were not created by God to be men's servants or eye candy. We are all one in Christ. The friendship between Captain Marvel and Nick Fury is particularly wonderful, while viewers can also enjoy the usual explosions and fights familiar to the MCU. This is a fun superhero origin story that carries with it a weighty message of biblical truth if we are willing to look. Superheroes who demonstrate mercy, rescue the innocent, and call out injustice are mirroring attitudes that Christ displayed. Captain Marvel is the best of these.

Last year, my friends and I went to the snow mountain for skiing. Frankly speaking, I had never skied before then, but I signed up for that without hesitation because I had always wanted to give it a try. There were 13 of us. When we finally set our foot on the snow mountain, we were amazed by the gorgeousness the nature presented to us. Before attending the skiing class, I was worried that if I could learn a new skill simply in a couple of hours. To everyone's surprise, despite the fact that it was literally my first attempt of skiing, I picked it up rather quickly, probably because I had learnt roller skating when I was about 10. After finishing the class, I was free to go on my own. I was then taught by my friends how to turn while keeping going, and again, I learnt quickly. After that, my friends and I went around and around on the harder track, and we all had great fun. If, for any reason, I had chosen otherwise, I suppose that I would regret so much once William came back from the snow mountain and showed me all the pictures and video clips he had shot when skiing. This is because I have actually experienced the great fun of skiing and viewed the amazingly gorgeous scenery of the snow mountain. Besides, I wouldn't have met so many amazing people who have taken good care of me and taught me how to ski.

Everyone makes mistakes, but why do you think that many people are so afraid of making them? Explain your reasoning.

Camera

Answer

There are real and imagined reasons why people are afraid of making mistakes. The latter is about catastrophising about a future that hasn't happened yet. We are generally social animals, and are affected by where we find ourselves in the pecking order. Low self-esteem, and trauma can make people afraid of being judged, criticised, or even punished. No one is born with low self-esteem, it's handed to them by someone, mostly when they are too young to choose otherwise. The person who is critical of others has made mistakes too, but you'll tend to find they are hardly likely to draw attention to that fact. Most mistakes are inconvenient, and sometimes embarrassing, but we all make them. It's how we learn, and it is important to personal development to be allowed to make occasional mistakes. Some people have an issue with perfectionism which others may say it a rejection of other things, or a need for more control. This does not mean all perfectionists try to control others. Maybe it is just themselves. Feeling safe in certainty is their refuge, but as we all know life is rarely certain. We all just have to hope for the best, while putting in some effort

When was the last time you looked up in the mirror and just looked at yourself? That messy hair, that dry-dull face, that fat bulging up its way around your belly-band. But when was the time you actually did something for it? We are into a fast-pace age, where everything needs to be done right now. Working people hardly find any time for themselves. Schedule is so tight, that you miss a minute and you will be late everywhere after that, and finally at the end of the day, when you are laying down on your bed you will complain "I didn't had time today", age-old excuse that fits in everywhere everytime. If I had an extra hour a day, I would take care of myself. Daily in these 24 hours, I take care of work, my family, friends, issues, roommates, but this extra hour, I would just spend for myself, as they say "ME-time". Many times, I look in front of mirror and remember that I oiled my hair few months back, that these nail polish which is in tints-bits need to be removed, that I just haven't taken enough care of my skin. If I had that extra time, it would be me, taking care of me, as "Looks do matter" and when I say looks I am not talking about pink-fair skin, hazel eyes and pink lips. I am talking about the way you present yourself to others, and that does count

Home means an enjoyable, happy place where you can live, laugh and learn. It's somewhere where you are loved, respected, and cared for. When you look at it from the outside, home is just a house, a building, maybe a yard. But on the inside, it's a lot more than wood and bricks. The saying "Home is where the heart is" says it all. Home is also where your memories lie. Home is where I got my head stuck under the couch. Home is where I fell in the goldfish pond. I remember sleeping in the playhouse, falling down the stairs and climbing up the apple tree. Without memories, most people wouldn't be the people that they are today. Just like memories, home is also where your hopes and dreams are. Dreaming about when you grow up. Being a spaceman or a firefighter. Sinking beneath the sea as a scuba diver. I couldn't imagine living without dreams. My home grounds them, and without a home, I wouldn't have any

Last week I had a big disagreement with one of my closest friends about a trip we were planning to go to. It was just after the final term exam in our university when one of our friends proposed to plan for a trip. The disagreement occurred with Jonathon when he proposed to visit Mexico while I preferred travelling to England. Jonathon might have reasons to visit Mexico, but I preferred to visit a place where I could enjoy the tranquillity and rich heritage. I argued that the majority of other friends have agreed to visit England, and the plan's sudden change would deter many of them from joining us. After an hour's argument and discussion, we finally agreed that we should both make a compromise and decided to go to Australia instead. Since then, we became closer than before. What I learned from this experience is that we should respect our friends' ideas; even if you do not agree with them, we can always find a solution that satisfies both parties.

The most beautiful place that I have ever visited is the Monterey Bay in California. I went there with my friends for our graduation trip. There is also a very nice and interesting aquarium there. During the summer, the beach in Pacific Grove is covered with flowers. Carmel-by-the-Sea is an artist community with many art galleries. The beaches in Carmel are gorgeous. And there are many, many, many CYPRESS TREES. In case that wasn't enough, on the 17-mile Drive, there are lots of millionaires (in fact they all are) and even some celebrities. I will conclude by saying that the Monterey is such a wonderful place, and I hope I can go there again in the near future.

Answer

If I have my own kids, one thing that I would do differently from my parents is that I will give them more freedom to play. In the past, parents used to neglect the benefits of free-play, they attached too much importance to learning academic knowledge, especially our parents' generations. Free-play teaches children how to entertain themselves and helps them learn to think independently and develop decision-making skills. It provides opportunities for children to discover what interests them and what they are good at. Free-play teaches kids to play with others. It helps them learn to regulate their emotions and be aware of other people's feelings. Letting children play amongst themselves allows children to develop conflict resolution skills and learn to take turns. Free-play also helps children learn how to be leaders and work as part of a team. I will conclude by saying that free-play is essential in children's overall development.

Answer

"A picture is worth a thousand words" is an English language adage meaning that complex and sometimes multiple ideas can be conveyed by a single still image, which conveys its meaning or essence more effectively than a mere verbal description. I totally agree with this sentence. As humans, we are largely responsive to visual pictures, whether we like to admit it or not. Pictures have the ability to make us feel happy, excited, disgusted, and curious, among other things. We can remember a famous brand just by looking at their image and can even reminisce about 10, 20, 30 years into the past to a moment in our lives where we were affected emotionally by a specific event simply by looking at an old picture. Images can also warn us or give us clues about what's to come. Along with powerfully emotional headlines, pictures that capture stunning moments in time stand prominently in our view peaking our curiosity and changing our mood instantly.

The last thing I have learned is that listening to others is one of the best social skills. Some people told me multiple times that they know how to listen. This was a bit confusing for me because I've never understood how you could not listen to others. I've noticed that we are too selfish nowadays, and we are too focused on ourselves to listen to others. I have learned it from one of my friends, who is always the most popular one in any group. He told me that we are just not interested in others. However, being a bit curious, and listening deeply to others makes you a great friend, girl/boyfriend, and even a better human. This is really beneficial for building good relationships with others, and to show my gratefulness, I invited him to a big dinner. In the future, I will focus on what others talk and figure out what their true meanings are.

I can make delicious macarons at home. Colorful, adorable, and bite-sized, their soft meringue exterior crumbles almost too easily into their smooth, creamy filling once they're safely in your mouth. Unfortunately, making them is hardly as simple. The trickiest part is getting the meringue shell right. Each individual shell should be frail, crisp, and smooth, so the baking process can be quite long and drawn out. To make them soft and shiny, you'll need a steady hand when piping out the mixture. Getting the meringue mixture right is pretty technique sensitive, too. Some chefs say that the eggs you use will need to be at least two weeks old, while the egg whites themselves will need to sit out at room temperature for 24 hours before you can even think about whisking. When I first ate macarons, I feel in love with this sweet food. That's why I searched for videos online and learned by myself. I spent a lot of time and energy learning how to make them, and finally, I succeed.

It is argued watching a movie based on a book can be equally good as reading the book. Everyone with regard to his private viewpoint and interests may maintain a specific direction toward this statement. Some believe that watching a movie would provide much excitement while others have a conviction that reading book before watching film gives humans deep insight in a broad sense. I am unanimous with the first group. To begin with, nobody could overlook the fact that movies are as tools which assist people to be amused. A movie which is produced with exaggerated scenes and exciting music, is able to attract a large audience. As a matter of fact, humans would employ their all imaginations in accompaniment with a movie to escape from their real life. The second reason for my argument lies the reality that directors usually display their characters briefly because they are restricted to a limited time. Watching a movie will cause the audiences to find a shallow but total understanding about a personality. It can be said that in such a great condition, when people refer to the related novel, they will confront the developed descriptions about characters and even the story; therefore, their former mentality helps them to improve their deduction power and perceive the book better.

The controversial issue in respect of the role of social media, in today's society, has drawn huge public attention and sparked a heated debate. Some people hold the view that social media has the potential to impede people's progress. While there are certainly valid viewpoints, on the contrary, I personally believe that social media is more likely to help a person's chances of achieving goals. With the advancement in internet-related technology, there is no doubt that our society has entered the era of social media. That is to say, social media now predominates over any other ways of people acquiring information. Therefore, social media can help propagate the information rather quickly, and the higher exposure it gets, the greater the influence will be. For instance, when a person wants to encourage people to protect the environment, he or she will stand up in front of a camera and shoot a video that later will be posted onto the social media. By doing so, a large audience will be able to see the message that a person wants to convey. And if the message is convincing and justifiable enough, viewers will put it into action, which will greatly aid the process.

As one of the world's most ancient civilizations, China is rich in traditions and unique customs. The Chinese New Year, or Spring Festival, is the happiest time of the year for nearly all children in China. No matter what region or background their families are from, they normally receive "hongbao," also known as lucky money. Lucky money usually consists of brand-new bills put in a red envelope and given by the family's elders. The lucky money represents blessings for the year to come. People tend to stop receiving lucky money when they begin to work, but in some parts of China, for example, Guangdong and Hong Kong, people can receive lucky money until they get married. Giving lucky money to children is one of China's unique cultures, but in Australia, there is nothing like it. People tend to combine Christmas and the New Year vacations together and spend it with families or travel to other countries. So I need to adapt to these different cultures and adjust myself to get used to the fact that no one is going to give me the lucky money during New Year's celebration. So I always organize a trip with friends, either travel within Australia or go abroad. The New Years' time can also be an ideal time for me to relax with friends, just like the Australians.

As we're in a long-distance relationship and it is difficult for us to see each other very often. Two days later, I got a message from him, it was written "I've been working on this from the past two days, and I slept at 7 am yesterday. I hope you like it! :)". But there was nothing! I texted him asked him about it, and then he sent me a link. I opened that link. My heart was pumping louder, and then the magic began. The background music of my favorite track started playing. In the middle of the screen, a heart started using thin threads and filling itself with colors like red, pink, orange, blue, purple. It was awesome! On the left-hand side, there were two pictures, one above another. The above one was me, while the below one was him. And this wasn't over yet. There was a background text which started typing as soon as the link was open. It typed "How a simple hi at stairs ended up with endless talks. Sometimes it's hard to find words to tell you how much you mean to me. Many times, I don't say anything at all. But I hope someday you'll understand, having you is what I live for." I was in tears. This was undoubtedly the best surprise that somebody ever did for me. I thanked him for inviting him to a fancy restaurant on our anniversary and giving him my handmade gift. Since then, our relationship has become more durable and reliable, and we have already planned for our weddings.

Those encouragements are pushing me to cook better and practice more cooking skills and techniques. After I have decided to work as a chef, I keep practicing at home and self-learning for about four years. But after years of home practicing, there are some problems with my techniques, and lots of questions about ingredients and confusion of combinations that have popped out. I started to feel tired to keep practicing by myself and unsure whether I can become a good chef. But one day, after I took my wife to a fine dining restaurant and enjoyed their delicious dishes, I realized that I need professional training and a place that allows me to use professional equipment. So I decided to enroll in a professional chef course, and I started to regain my original purpose to become a chef, which is presenting delicious dishes to people. I really like to see people's happy and enjoying faces when eating the food I cooked. To fulfill my dream, I will keep practicing and training hard to become a well-known chef.

As a young chef, I want people, such as chefs and customers, to remember my cooking skill. Although I am still being trained, I had practiced my cooking skill for many years before I decided to be a chef as my career. Working as a chef, the experience is much more important than qualification. To gain experience requires a chef to work from the bottom level in the kitchen before handling the dishes. Moreover, as a chef, it is important for customers and the head chef to remember me, not for my personality but for the dishes that I have cooked and served. It is only the good taste and good cooking skill that I want people to remember. One of the benefits that being known for my cooking skill is that it allows me to get into a higher-level position in the kitchen so that I can learn more, think more, practice more and train more for my other skills. Once I have been graded satisfaction for my skills, I can have the opportunity to work in a higher-level restaurant, and the head chef of the restaurant I work for is willing to write me a recommendation letter for it. Once I am relatively reputable, I also can have the opportunity to work as Michelin 3-star Chef.

I felt very excited about being in that group of people, as they were all very cheerful and excited; all of them were chatting, playing, dancing and singing. Everybody was waiting happily for the new year to come. One positive thing about being in that large crowd is that you will see everyone is enjoying their time with friends and families and having a good time. You will experience that people are all very happy and looking forward to the new year, and this kind of happiness would make you feel more excited and waiting for the good things to happen in the coming year.

Answer

When it comes to the most important thing I need in order to have a happy life, I suppose it would be a healthy relationship. Personally speaking, the only thing that really matters in my life is my relationships with other people. I reckon what brings us the most happiness is family and friends. It is hard to think of life without relationships. I am terribly afraid of loneliness. The root of happiness is not money, fame, or good looks—it's the people we choose to surround ourselves with and how well we nurture our relationships with them. Having a better social life can be worth as much as an enormous amount of money in terms of life satisfaction. Most of what we do to relieve stress doesn't actually work. Friends, however, do take the edge off. This being said, as with most things in life, when it comes to build good relationships, quality is more important than quantity. We are only capable of having a finite number of people in our social sphere, probably 100 to 200? I cannot be sure of this. But I find it not easy to manage social network. Therefore, I choose to concentrate on a handful of friends in order to maintain quality relationships. Having someone in my life whom I would feel comfortable phoning anytime to tell my troubles to makes me feel relieved.

Answer

If I could listen to only one type of music for a whole year, I definitely would choose classical music. This is because classical music has the power to cultivate a person's taste. When people hear classical music, many of them will think of "first class" and "sophistication", because back in that time period, people who would attend music events at theatres which were usually the ones of the upper class. Besides, each piece of classical music has a fascinating story behind it. With the genre of classical music when people hear this music, they can pinpoint the era of where it came from. My favorited artists who perform classical music are Mozart and Bach. When I listen to their masterpieces, I can hear what the music was like during those times, and it gives me a sense of what the culture was like back then. In those times they didn't call it "classical music" it was just their form of music. They have created music that is original, different for our generation and generations to come, and their music is also timeless because no matter what, classical music will live on. People nowadays may have different preferences in music, but the fact that everyone has been exposed to classical music since they were young is undeniable. I really appreciate that classical music has been around for such a long period of time and is still loved by many.

Do you think it's possible for a person who has committed a serious crime to change and be part of society again? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Answer

As far as I am concerned, all criminals are capable of changing, even if they have committed a serious crime. Day after day, year after year, imagine having no space to call your own, no choice over who to be with, what to eat, or where to go. There is threat and suspicion everywhere. Love or even a gentle human touch can be difficult to find. You are separated from family and friends. If they are to cope, then prisoners confined to this kind of environment have no option but to change and adapt. This is especially true for those facing long-term sentences. I suppose no one can remain completely unchanged or unscathed by the prison experience. I haven't had the opportunity to visit a prison in reality, but from what I have learnt from the movies, prisoners are to observe extremely strict rules and regulations, and to perform tasks that sever the community, such as manufacturing a certain type of product and gardening. By doing so, criminals get a sense of working for the good of the society. Time spent as a prisoner, in a highly structured yet socially threatening environment, is bound to lead to significant personality changes. In conclusion, I believe that it is possible for a person who has committed a serious crime to change and be part of society again.

Answer

My least favourite school subject is mathematics. I prefer humanity subjects and physics in scientific subjects. During the free periods, all I want to do is to read the work of great authors and perfect my writing. I find the principles of physics to be intriguing and straightforward, but when it comes to mathematics, either algebra or geometry, the content is too difficult for me to participate in and prepare for. I just can't get my head around it. How on earth can a certain number be transformed into a completely different one? And the rather sophisticated formulae have always been a massive obstacle that I guess I can never overcome. My math grades weren't always that low, they were okay when I was in primary school, but since year 9 they started to fall gradually year by year as the content got increasingly complicated. Unfortunately, mathematics is a mandatory subject, so I will have to try my best to complete the course. If something could be changed to make mathematics more enjoyable, I would like anything relating to advanced level mathematics to be eliminated from the subject.

Answer

When it comes to three qualities that I think my friends would say I have, I suppose they would pick kindness, trustworthiness, and attention to detail. This is because I am genuinely friendly, generous, and considerate. Being kind often requires courage and strength. Kindness is an interpersonal skill. It usually involves devoting resources to others, rather than be self-interested, which means having more and more for myself. As a result, kindness actually brings lasting well-being for me. I am a man of my word. I don't talk much but when I do it carries unparalleled weights. Every time I am assigned a task, I will make sure every single detail is up to required standard. Therefore, my friends can always trust me to get things done beautifully. Also, I always keep an eye on details, and I am active when I see friends in need. After being helped, my friends will appreciate my kindness, show me respect, and probably return the favour later when I need a hand. By helping others, I get a sense of fulfillment, and the relationship is reinforced.

Answer

Well, we all need help at some point in time in our lives. I also received help in many occasions and help others too. When I help others, it makes me happy in the way that it gives me a sense of fulfillment. Today, I am going to talk about the last time when I voluntarily helped one of my friends. I helped my needy friend who was my classmate. His name is Wesley, and he comes from a poor family. He didn't have enough money to buy books. And I used to receive a hundred bucks pocket money per week in those days. Usually, I would have spent that money on groceries such as snacks and drinks. However, I decided to help him by giving all my pocket money to him so he could afford to buy the books he needed for the course. I still remember vividly his facial expression. The very moment he received my financial help, he was so touched that he couldn't help but almost cried out. He didn't dare to let me stare at him while he was crying, so he hugged me tightly for a long time. I kept patting him in an attempt to soothe him. Quite a while later, he went to the bookstore to buy the books. Since then, we have been best friends. To be honest, I felt happy at that moment. That feeling was extremely different which I never felt before. I noticed something that could give me more happiness than eating snacks.

Answer

Pride in ownership is obvious when the residents, whether renters or owners, maintain their homes and care about their neighborhood. In my opinion, neighbours should participate to connect and create local groups that bring the residents together for the betterment of the area. Luckily, I've got a neighbour who is very kind to others. When I want an expensive tool for one-time use, my neighbour would be more than happy to lend it to me. When I am in the middle of cooking brunch, but one egg or spoonful of salt short, I know I can ask my neighbour for it, which would save me from driving all the way to the shopping centre. Of course, I will have to return the favour, but it won't necessarily be in the same means. For instance, when I finished cooking brunch, I would ask him to join me, and we would have a good gossip. That is how me maintain a healthy relationship in the locale. When it comes to what can be improved in my neighbourhood, I suppose that would be the security. Low crime rates give a neighborhood a sense of ease and calm. As safety and security are everyone's concern, crime is a quick way to tell if a neighborhood is improving or not. You can usually spot a transitional and improving neighborhood by the improvement or decline in its crime rates. Improving the security level of the locale will make the place more liveable and more agreeable for everyone in the neighbourhood.

Answer

Teens tend to have much energy to get out, so going out to play basketball or tennis with the whole family must be fun. The family where teenagers grow up has a big influence on how he or she deals with relationships, copes with situations, and learns about living life. Family time is also important because if children don't get the required attentions, they might do things that could get them into troubles. There's an old saying that goes: families that play together, stay together. We all know that the quality time with our family is paramount in building stronger relationships. Building forts, sharing stories, and just being together makes a difference in all of our lives. Family bonding time builds confidence, teaches children about interacting with others, and create wonderful memories that last a lifetime. The children whose parents spent time with them did far better in school than those whose parents spent their off-work hours pursuing their own hobbies. Plus, parents may discover it's really fun and relaxing to play games, read books, and build forts with their kids!

I will read both fiction and non-fiction, but I much prefer fiction; probably 90% of the books I read are fiction. When I read non-fiction, it's rarely for entertainment value. Usually, I'm hoping to get several useful ideas to implement in my work or in my life. As such, I'm constantly having to monitor what I'm reading with a critical eye; in contrast to the way the question is phrased, just because something is non-fiction doesn't mean that it's real. There are some non-fiction books that I do read for entertainment value; Mary Roach's Stiff: The Curious Lives of Human Cadavers comes to mind. Fiction is mostly for entertainment, even though I often want to be challenged by the material. When a fictional text is challenging, it provides me with insight into the human condition that I didn't have before.

Answer

I believe schools should teach students social skills in addition to core subjects. Building social skills in students can have long-term benefits for them. Besides the academic knowledge, getting along with other people, and adapting to interact in a different cultural environment can go a long way in shaping the personality of a student. Learning social skills at school can teach a student not just about communication but also about cooperation, self-control, confidence, independence, and empathy. Here are a few reasons why schools should teach social learning skills in schools: 1. Builds confidence and individuality: Having good social skills not just makes a student interactive; it also gives students' a sense of confidence. He or she can articulate express his or her feelings. This is a lifelong skill that will have lifelong benefits. 2. Encourage positive behaviors: Social skills improve students' positive behaviors and discourage negative behaviors like bullying and throwing tantrums or acting out. Students who find controlling their emotions difficult will benefit from social learning skills. 3. Good quality of life: Being able to strike up an interesting conversation is an art that helps a person in life. Learning social skills teaches students to develop good communication skills. This will go a long way in improving the emotional quotient of a child.

Those moments in my childhood might seem small, but they have made hard work and stick-to-itiveness a significant part of who I am today. I shared this experience with my friends, and they have the same feelings as me. We all miss our childhoods. They were so great. You didn't have to deal with career, relationships, money, conspiracy, bills, depressions, loneliness, bills, fear, everything. Do you think it's important to keep all your friends, or is it okay to let go of some and make new friends along the way? Explain your reasoning.

Camera

Answer

We're all in relationships because we have needs, so it's not a problem to be needy. Every friendship has ups and downs, so it's important to evaluate the situation holistically before taking any action. To me, there are three markers designate a healthy friendship. The first being positivity. To measure this, I take note of whether I feel good or bad after hanging out with this person. The second is consistency, which has to do with how often I see or connect with this friend. And the third concerns vulnerability. When a friendship satisfies these guidelines, I feel like I can share myself to that person, be acknowledged for who I am, and feel known. An unhealthy relationship, on the other hand, is lacking in at least one of the components. Interestingly, whenever something goes wrong, I need to have more than 1 positive feeling for every negative feeling in the relationship to keep it healthy. For instance, a friend of mine talks endlessly at dinner about his issues without asking me about mine. I feel rather upset. But if he then calls me the next day, invites me to something fun, pays the check to thank me for listening, and so on and so forth, my net experience may ultimately be a positive one. In the cases where a friend is lacking one or more of those components, and keeps acting the same way, I would rather terminate the relationship. To me, it's perfectly okay.

Do you think that technology in the classroom improves instruction, or do you think it is just distracting? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Answer

The modern classroom is aglow with screens. Children as young as five are packing their own personal computers and tablets in their schoolbags along with their lunchboxes. But people would argue: do laptops, tablets and phones in the classroom promote and enhance learning or do they bring with them a world of distraction for students and for teachers a battle for learners' attentions? Using computer technology in the classroom isn't just about digital devices in class — it relates to anything that facilitates an interaction between teachers and students. Personally speaking, technology can be harnessed to improve student engagement and effectiveness. Firstly, using technology in the classroom allows you to experiment more in pedagogy and get instant feedback. Secondly, there are countless resources for enhancing education and making learning more fun and effective. With technology in the classroom, students have instant access to fresh information that can supplement their learning experience. Thirdly, technology can automate a lot of your tedious tasks. Furthermore, we live in a digital world, and technology is a life skill. A 21st century view of learner success requires students to be thoughtful consumers of digital content. In conclusion, I hold the view that technology in the classroom can improve instruction.

What is one thing about your home culture that you wish you could change? Explain your reasoning.

Camera

Re-practice

Submit

Answer

If I were to change one thing about my home culture, mostly likely it would be the imbalanced preference for male children over the female ones. Just like western countries, both men and women should move out of their parents' house and create their own home and family. The birth family becomes extended family thereafter, and the spouse should become immediate family and priority over birth family. In Chinese society, girls' parents accept the fact that since her birth that one day she will leave them. Personally, boys' parents should also start accepting that their sons will be moving out after marriage if nuclear family come into existence not just as an option or need but as an integral part of a culture. If parents can accept that both son and daughter will move out after marriage, they will not have desire only for a male child. Hence, it will automatically help control population as families will no longer keep giving birth to children until they have a male child, and it will, more to the point, stop the worse things from happening, which are the cold-blood killing of female children in womb and the deserting female children. In my home culture, femininity is strongly associated with the domestic work. They are supposed to do all the housework and raise children. I believe we should abandon the stereotypical image of feminine behaviour.

Do you think that people are actually able to change, or are they only able to act like they have changed? Explain your reasoning.

Camera

Re-practice

Submit

Answer

Surely there are things about people that they themselves don't like or are not liked by others, so they change them. Nonetheless, sometimes it's more likely that the people keep on doing them, even though they said they would like to change them. There is an old saying, "A leopard can't change its spots." Well, it is virtually true in the animal world, but we people don't necessarily see the same pattern. To me, this is more of a philosophical or psychology issue, or probably bit of both, and it can get rather complicated. Hereby, I'll just express my personal thoughts. Firstly, "personality" is a word used to describe traits that are consistent across time and place. For example, we expect a highly extraverted person to be outgoing at home, at work, and at school. While personality is not a perfect predictor of behavior, it does give us a general idea of how someone is likely to think and act. In this sense, people are less likely to be able to change, instead, they can just act like they have changed in order to fit into the environment. On the other hand, when it comes to the way people behave and think, personally speaking, people are able to change. However, people can't just snap their fingers and say goodbye to well-established patterns, even when those patterns result in bad consequences, because those patterns have been shaped since we were young. People are so used to behaving and thinking in a particular way that the change will require extensive effort and will be quite time-consuming. We cannot expect to see the change take place any time soon. It is usually a slow process, and is highly dependent on one's commitment, and it takes perseverance.

Camera

Re-practice

Answer

Young people are always the best when it comes to adopting new changes. Therefore, it would make the world a better place if young people share a common goal and work towards it together. Personally, youngsters can greatly help protect the environment, specifically to reduce the pace of global warming. To begin with, young people can make smart choices by using energy-efficient products. In order to do this, it is critically important that young people understand which areas of their lives generate the most carbon emissions. In most cases, it would be the personal vehicles and electric appliances that contribute the most to global warming. Therefore, firstly, they can opt to travel to and from universities, workplaces and shopping malls by public transportations, such as buses and undergrounds, rather than private cars, which can help reduce the emission of greenhouse gasses by a great amount if we all commit to it. Secondly, household appliances such as air-conditioners, televisions, washing machines etc. normally consume the most power. Hence, young people need to specifically look at the energy consumption ratings when they plan to buy those items. Apart from acting on their own, it is strongly advisable that youngsters should also raise the awareness of protecting the environment among their parents and other relatives. If I was asked the reasons why don't more young people do this, I suppose it is probably because they themselves have not yet realized the significance of being environmentally friendly, or even if they have realized it, but lack the motivation to implement the action.

Answer

If I have to recall the last test that I had to study for, I'll tell you this. It was the last couple of weeks of the semester in 2016, and I was in the final year of my bachelor's degree. During this period, I was rather busy as I had to complete my final year project while getting ready for final year exam simultaneously. On the very first day I realized that I had to make a proper timetable for both works. Otherwise it would be highly likely that I lose either final year project or the final exam, which both were equally important for completing my degree. The resource I used was excel. I used it to create the study plan I was going to stick with. Though I spent few hours to make that plan, it was really helpful for me to manage both tasks without getting much stress. I learnt that a good plan prior to the commencement is essential for a successful project, and I believe this will help me in my future career. Even though I had a plan and timetable for my works, I had to work 15-18 hours per day with few hours' sleep. Some days I felt that I was going to suffer from shock or even die of tiredness. But after having a short interval of break - a hot shower usually served the purpose - I was able to reduce my stress down to certain level, and eventually I went through those bleakest time throughout the course. During the shower, I went on YouTube to play music, which I would strongly recommend other students who have to study hard for their examinations, as listening to music really helps you relax.

The controversial issue in respect of experiment on animals has long been open for debate. In my opinion, it is okay to do experiment on animals for the sake of developing life-saving medicine which has the potential to do greater good. If you've ever taken a medicine or had a medical procedure, you've benefited from animal testing and research, you just haven't realized it. Animals have been used repeatedly throughout the history of biomedical research. Here are some examples: research in cows helped create the world's first vaccine, which in turn helped end smallpox. Studies with monkeys, dogs, and mice led to the polio vaccine. Medications used to combat cancer, HIV/AIDS, Alzheimer's, hepatitis, and malaria would not have been possible without research with primates. Animals have contributed greatly to life-saving and life-improving breakthroughs, without which, humankind wouldn't have thrived as we now do, and possibly wouldn't even have survived through the horrible outbreak of the pandemics that I have just mentioned, as they all have the capability to take away hundreds of millions of people's lives within a short period of time, if vaccines hadn't been developed. The harm to humans from the use of substances that have not been first tested on animals could be devastating and far beyond your imagination. I can't stress more on the importance of animal experimentation to avert or prevent human tragedy. The practice of using animals in biomedical research has led to significant advances in the treatment of various diseases. In conclusion, I agree with the practice of animal testing to develop life-saving medicine.

The ability to cook a meal is a necessary life skill. It will save you when your favorite takeout restaurant is closed for a holiday, or there's no time to go to the store, or in the midst of a global pandemic, such as the Corona Virus we are all experiencing worldwide at present. Being able to cook can also serve as a catalyst for your relationships such as romance. Imagine that on the night of Valentine's day, you and your beloved one can spend some time together at the kitchen, with the delightful music being played, and then drink some wine and have two beautifully cooked steaks served on a table with candles lit up. Who would say no to such a romantic evening? This being said, a good proportion of our people, however, are still struggling to learn this basic skill. Indeed, not all of us are gourmet chefs. Thanks to the advancement in technology, I happen to have learnt a list of dishes from the applications on my mobile phone. They allow me to search for any dishes that I feel like to cook, and more importantly, the receipt is vividly taught in a short clip which enables me to learn with ease. Trust me, there are enormous amounts of resources readily available on the internet that can help you to learn. If you are not a big fan of the kitchen, have a few low-effort dishes in your repertoire you feel confident whipping up, even if it's just macaroni and cheese.

At what age do you think it's appropriate for children or young people to have unrestricted access to the Internet? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Answer

I think young people who are over the age of 18 should have unlimited access to the internet, because they are already adults by law in China. And they have the rights to get access to the information available online and decide for themselves whether they will utilize the information or not. It is important that they can only get access to these information after they turn 18 years old, because people before 18 still have incomplete understanding of the world and immature thinking or one-sided thinking towards certain issues. It is easy for them to be biased through controversial information on the Internet. It is also easy for them to commit illegal activities online that they may not aware of. Therefore, we should restrict people who are under the age of 18 to some extent in terms of internet access.

Answer

I believe students should primarily read non-fiction because students should focus on their academic ability in order to cope with the high demands from universities. It does not mean that students should never read literature, but literature is somehow irrelevant for students who do not aim to do artistic work, for example, writing fiction. If students have enough leisure time, then fiction is a good way to relax and to inspire them. Other reasons for focusing more on reading non-fiction would be extending students knowledge of different content areas and improving their academic writing skills. Especially for students who aim to achieve higher level of education such as a doctorate, they should read research paper more often rather than distracting themselves by too much fiction.

We all feel taken advantage of from time to time. Perhaps you did not get the right haircut on your last visit to the salon, or your last restaurant meal was mediocre. Maybe a friend is taking you for granted, or a neighbor is continually asking for favors. Feeling taken advantage of implies a feeling of injustice or inequality. As a person who is quick to help or listen, I am often taken advantage of. I use to be upset about it, but now I find I'd rather be taken advantage of than taking advantage of someone else. One of the most important factors is that I want someone to love me because I can always offer help. I like the feeling when someone turns me for help, and I will feel proud of myself whenever I can help them figure out the problems. Moreover, it will make me feel guilty if I take advantage of others.

Volunteering is often thought of as a selfless act — which you give up your time for a worthy cause without being paid. While this may be true, what is often less obvious are the many benefits people experience when they volunteer. Volunteer community service should be required for teens. Volunteering in a community can help them broaden their horizons, meet new friends, experience different cultures, or even learn a new language, all while contributing to society's needs. Here are some of the many ways volunteering can help young people develop into confident, proactive citizens. To begin with, a community volunteer job can help teenagers build self-esteem. Though faced with society's most challenging problems, many teens ultimately find volunteer work empowering. While working on solutions to these problems, they can see how their efforts can improve the lives of others. This can play a significant role in developing their self-esteem throughout their teenage years when many are filled with insecurities and a lack of self-confidence. In fact, teenagers who volunteer often experience fewer mental health problems than those who don't. When they see how their actions affect a community for the better, their self-confidence spikes, and they feel happier. Secondly, volunteer jobs can help teenagers widen their social circle. A teenager's social circle typically consists of family and school friends. Volunteering allows youth to meet people outside of their usual circle, some of whom may have a positive impact on their future. Volunteering provides the perfect opportunity to meet like-minded people and form relationships that last a lifetime. Finally, volunteering also gives teens an opportunity to experience situations that occur in the workplace, such as having to work as part of a team. They see what people have to do in specific jobs and the conditions in which they have to work. This helps them eliminate what they can't see themselves doing and drill down to what they really want to do.

Do you think that people should accept limitations, or should they always try to overcome them? Explain your reasoning.

Answer

I always believe that some limitations can be overcome while some others cannot. It depends on whether the problem is solvable and it also depends on the determination of the person. I believe once I am determined, then I should always try to overcome the limitations. The reason is that without the thorough investigation and firm belief, problems cannot be solved. Limitations always exist in all kinds of settings. For example, some people may be inept at learning a second language. They may find it difficult to break through the bottleneck during the learning. However, since it is a solvable problem, people should try to overcome it. Thus, we should always try to overcome solvable problem and to do that, we have to be determined.

My favorite holiday was Christmas and during the last Christmas, I traveled to Australia with my family. It was the first time that I travel abroad with my family and it means a lot for both of my parents as well. We went to Sydney to visit the Opera House and had a great dinner in darling harbor. We saw different culture integrated with each other everywhere of Sydney and the aboriginal performance in circular quay is the most impressive. The most special of the experience is that I did all these things with my family. I am lucky enough to have them with me and we laughed a lot together. I asked someone else to take a photo of my family in front of the Opera House and it was the best moment of the day. I smiled with true happiness and really enjoy the whole experience in Sydney.

Do you think it's more important to have an impact on the world or on a few people? Explain your reasoning.

Camera

Re-practice

Submit

Answer

In my opinion, having an impact on the world is more important than on a few people when I have the actual influence and ability to do so. Therefore, it has some limits. Not everyone can have an impact on the world. So it is the best that we aim for it and do the small things first. However, as for importance, there is no doubt that having an impact on the world will contribute to the whole humanity, which means it has a significant effect on human development and history. For example, Einstein is considered one of the most influential people in human history. He changed the world rather than a few people. Some parts of the world may have their own hero, but they are only known locally, and their significance to the world is much less. Having said that, I believe that each of us was born with a mission to have a different degree of impact on different people, and together all of us contribute to the development of humanity. Therefore, it is meaningless to argue whether it is important to have an impact on the world or on a few people.

I surprised my mother by giving her a bunch of flowers as a gift on Mother's Day. I planned it beforehand and asked the postman to send it on that day. My mother was surprised and happy when she opened the door and saw the flowers and the card in it. She cried a little bit because she was moved by my grateful words on the card. I said thank you for bringing me up and taking care of me whenever I need, I love you, Mom. Since then, we are even closer to each other and understand more about each other. It was a great surprise that I brought to my mother's life, and a great connection was built up since then. And I believe Mother's Day is the most important day in a year when all of us who can still be with our mother cherish the time with them.

Name one thing people do that you think is a waste of time. Why do you think people do this anyway?

Camera

Answer

Some people often complain about things or keep whining. This is a waste of time because it does no good to anyone and does not solve the problem. People complain or whine mainly because they are emotional and have a bad mood due to certain unsatisfying things happening. They either release their bad emotion through complaining or avoid solving the problem by blaming others. Either way, complaining is a waste of time. Sometimes I also complain, mostly about myself doing not right, but I never waste too much time on it as I know I should find a practical solution to keep on moving. For example, I often release my emotion by taking a run for five minutes and then go back to work. This way, I can get back to working on solutions without a bad mood as quickly as possible.

Well, I believe the best compliment that someone could give me is that "you always see the bright side (of things)." The reason is that I do often see the bright side of things, and I also need someone to say it when I do not see the bright side sometimes. So this compliment may be a reminder of how optimistic I am even when I may sometimes feel upset. This way, I can adjust myself and face the difficulties again with optimism. If the compliment is from my family or friends, then I will be even more encouraged and motivated because they are the people who know me well, and their compliment is an acknowledgment of my optimism. It will give me a lot of strength and courage to keep it that way.

The country where I would like to spend a year in is Italy. I've been dreaming of visiting this country for more than five years and ironically an attempt to visit Italy was canceled two years ago. I'll definitely visit the country as soon as my graduation is complete. Italy is in Southern Europe. Rome, the largest city and the Capital of Italy, has been the leading political and religious center of the western civilization, serving as the capital of both the Roman Empire and Christianity. I'd like to go there to see the great museums, historical monuments and structures, cultural and other attractions and above all to get an impression of an Italian way of life. Another reason I want to go there is to visit the Vatican City. I have read and heard numerous historical facts about this country, and witnessing them would be a great joy for me. There are plenty of things to see- arts, museums, Colosseum, Leaning Tower of Pissa, Roman Forum, Florence Cathedral, St. Peter's Basilica, Milan Cathedral, Sistine Chapel, Piazza San Marco, Circus Maximus and lots of other places I'd love to visit.

Do you think that some animals should have the same rights as humans? Provide reasons to support your opinion.

Camera

Re-practice

Answer

I believe giving some animals the same rights as humans are impractical and somehow naive to think about that. This is mainly because animals are fundamentally different from humans in terms of intelligence, and our moral standards require otherwise. Firstly, animals do not understand what the rights are, and it is meaningless to waste our already scant resources on ensuring animals' rights. Having said so, animals do have rights, but it is not the same rights as humans. For example, they deserve to have their natural environment. Secondly, if someone faces the choice of either saving one animal or one person, then moral standards will almost certainly require one to keep the person rather than the animal. Then what is the point of talking about the same rights for the animal? Therefore, animals cannot and certainly will not have the same rights as humans. It is rather a profound question than a practical matter.

Answer

When you have a chance to take a glance at my closet, you would be amazed at how much content I already have put into it. For me, I just want a little reminder that I already have so much. I'm so lucky, and my daily attitude should reflect that. If I want to go to the mall with a friend one night to shop for fun, that's OK, but I'll know that I don't need another pair of jeans no matter what they cost because I already have five! It might surprise you, but I'm not that big of a shopper anyway. My thing is I want to make sure that I really wear everything I own, or I should be donating it. If I do buy something new, it should be something I really need. And the big goal is to be thankful for what I already have. If I were to add another item into my closet in the next year, I suppose I would get a nice-looking cap, probably a black one as I already got a white one in there. I would like a black cap because I really don't want to wash, blow-dry, and then style my hair on a daily basis. It takes a fair amount of time, and I am worried that those hair-styling products will somewhat damage my hair. I picked black because black goes with every other color. How lazy I am!

Answer

When it comes to an important holiday in my home country, I would say the national day is worth mentioning. China's national day is on the first of October. It is the date on which China's first president - president Mao proclaimed to the entire world that the People's Republic of China had been established. This particular day is to be remembered by every single Chinese people because our ancestors had made an astonishingly determined effort toward unifying the nation. They had made enormous sacrifices to overcome every obstacle during those eventful days. For instance, the two parties - the communist party and the democrat party - had waged a fierce war against the Japanese army for eight years, and eventually won the war at a great cost. Since the national day in 1949, China has seen an overall development at an amazingly fast pace. Therefore, all Chinese people should be grateful for those who had made contributions to the decent life we are enjoying now. For all those, the national day is the most significant holiday in my home country.

Do you think that people can ever be truly selfless? Explain your reasons for your opinion.

Camera

Answer

I don't think people can be truly selfless. We, as humans, never do anything unless it is good for what we care about. If you care about the little starving children, you might spend a lot of money to help them, but ultimately it is because your brain does so, and rewards you (itself) in some way for it. You will never, and I mean never, take action that hurts your goals. That is not how brains work. We might call people who donate to charity selfless, but they do it because they want to, and because they gain from it (in emotional or other non-monetary way).

I believe pursuing perfect for everything is too much. Perfectionism is like running in a hamster wheel. We can get caught up in a cycle of trying to be 'perfect'. For many of us, when we have such high and strict standards, it can become impossible to meet these standards. I do not know about you, but when I aim for a goal and do not achieve it, I can feel pretty disappointed. Where perfectionism can be a problem is when people experience low self-esteem, anxiety, and depressed mood. We also know that perfectionism can be associated with the development and maintenance of several psychological disorders.

I was in my early university days when this disagreement took place and I had totally different ideas with my best friend Rose about how to finish an assignment. Rose didn't prepare for it and only copied answers online. I tried to convince her that the whole concept of the assignment was not to copy-paste contents from any website and encouraged her that she can write excellent essays on her own. However strong the disagreement was, our friendship was stronger, and Rose yield to follow my lead to finish this assignment. That's how the dispute was resolved and we were all happy about that. Honestly speaking, the disagreement was so strong, and at a time, I thought that's going to harm our friendship. Everyone has a dream house in mind where they want to live in, and I am no different in that regard. The dream house I want to live in would be a two-story simple house in the middle of my farm surrounded by trees and agricultural land. I grew up on a farm, and it instilled in me the appreciation for nature. The house I want would have four bedrooms, a living room, and a spacious modern style kitchen. In the backyard, I would like to plant flowers and have an English garden. I would also like to plant seasonal vegetables and fruits as I prefer organic food over market produce. I want a simple house lacking ostentation. However, there are things that I would want no matter what. For example, I would like a dishwasher as I don't like doing dishes. Also, every room in the house should get sunshine every day, especially my bedroom and living room. Another facility I want is an open bar in the basement where I can entertain friends and guests as I am a very outgoing person. In conclusion, my dream house would be one home with four bedrooms in the middle of the farm I grew up in. I prefer that location because I have a deep emotional connection to the land and community there.

Answer

As far as I am concerned, groups can't exist without individuals so that the individual is more important. The group should act to preserve the rights of the individual, but the individual should act to further the betterment of the group. A group is made up of numerous individuals. There was a famous quote that stated, "A country is only as good as the people that live in it." The same concept here too. A mass of individuals makes a group; therefore, the singular individual is way more important than they might think. The individual needs to be strong, or the group will never be strong. The individual has to be able to support themselves and go their own way because if they rely on the group, then they will never live on their own. That's why I believe that the individual is more important than the group.

One of the biggest questions surrounding self-driving cars isn't a technological one; it is philosophical that self-driving vehicles are safer than human-operated vehicles? It's not something for which there's an easy answer. From my point of view, self-driving vehicles are more reliable than human-operated ones. According to the news report from China Daily, in 2009, Google launched its self-driving project, which focused on saving lives and serving people with disabilities. In a 2014 video, Google showed blind and elderly riders climbing into its custom-designed autonomous vehicles, part of the company's plan to "improve road safety and help lots of people who can't drive." In these testing videos, its vehicles have been in dozens of crashes but caused no serious injuries due to its safety self-driving system. Now there are dozens of autonomous vehicle companies testing their self-driving vehicles on the streets, but with minimal reports of injury. As there are now more and more vehicle companies are joining in the competition, it will help to improve the self-driving technology in a great deal. So in the near future, we can see more self-driving vehicles on the street with fewer injury reports.

There are many things being banned by school rules and regulations, and dating is the one I disagree with most. If the restriction is to be removed, my life would probably be sweeter during high school, as I would have already tasted the fruit of love. Dating a gorgeous girl would have significantly relieved the heavy burden of study during those pedestrian school days, especially the bleakest final exam periods. If, by any chance, that was a healthy relationship that she and I have maintained along till now, as I am mature enough, we would probably have seen each other's families and planned to take the next step – marriage. Oh my god, there is already all kinds of beautiful scenes of post-marriage life going around in my mind, ha-ha. In terms of my classmates, I suppose the majority of them would have done the same thing as I have – to temporarily put aside all the frustration resulted from academic performance, and cultivate a relationship with the ones they had been fascinated for a long time, and enjoy the sweetness of love or learn one thing or two from failure. Either way, those school days would have much different, and I bet it is just the change that most of us, as a school kid, would have desired.

Over the past decades, pursuing popularity has always been one of the ultimate goals in many people's life. Not only because they want to leave an impressive imprint on the world's history, but also because fame can bring them a good fortune. Nevertheless, there are, without a doubt, several adverse effects of being too popular. First and foremost, too much popularity can potentially interfere with the celebrity's personal life. We can cite a convincing example of China's celebrities; they have to wear sunglasses, hats, and masks to avoid being recognized by their fans in the streets or other public areas when there are no pre-scheduled events require the public's attention. Most influencers have to use bodyguards and other anti-detection measures to avoid unwanted exposure to their privacy, which makes it rather inconvenient for them to live a normal life. Apart from that, all celebrities must be extremely wary of their words and behaviors because they have a vast number of followers who look up to them. As a result, they cannot do whatever they want but to act as the exact persons that their fans expect them to be. In a word, to gain extensive popularity, celebrities have to give up something in one form or another.

Answer

If I were to learn a type of music to perform, it definitely would be classical music. This is because classical music can last for a long period of time. When people hear classical music, many of them will think of "first-class" and "sophistication" because back in that time, people who attended music events at theatres were usually the ones of the upper class. Besides, each piece of classical music has a fascinating story behind it. With the genre of classical music, when people hear this music, they can pinpoint the era of where it came from. My favorite artists who perform classical music are Mozart and Bach. When I listen to their masterpieces, I can hear what the music was like back during those times, and it gives me a sense of what the culture was like. In those times, they didn't call it "classical music", it was just their form of music. They have created music that is original, different for our generation and generations to come, and also their music is timeless because no matter what, classical music will live on. People nowadays may have different preferences for music, but the fact that everyone has been exposed to classical music since they were young is undeniable. I really appreciate that classical music has been around for such a long period and is still loved by many.

When you find out that a friend was lying to you, it's a hard fact to accept. The real challenge lies in how you respond once you catch someone in the act. The moment when I learned that my best friend Jack lied to me about the fact that he was going abroad to further his study, he was already on the plane to America. We promised to go to the same university and company each other forever. I read the text message his mother sent to me again and again, and I couldn't believe that was happening. Till the very last minute, he didn't dare to tell me the truth himself. I was overwhelmed with sadness and happiness at the same time. Firstly, I have to say it is a globalized world. There is almost nothing that is purely produced in my country, and if there is, the demands will not be met by the supply. For example, the computer we can use can be produced by a local factory, but some of the computer components have to be bought from other countries. Therefore, this computer is not purely produced in my country. So the topic that I can only buy products made in my country is not possible. If it really happens, then there will surely be an economic recession, and people will lose their jobs. The development and modernization will stagnate, and people will die due to a lack of medicine. The most difficult thing to live without is medicine because most of the highly effective medicine is imported. Without these medicines, people will die. If globalization is reversed, China will go back to at least 30 years ago when people have to focus on agriculture and manufacturing machines that are needed to ensure our basic needs.

Answer

I personally believe our curriculum is set by professionals and is trustworthy. Therefore, the decision should be up to the research and policymakers. I am satisfied with most of the school activity, and if I have to say what should be eliminated, I would say physical exercise. I am aware that physical exercise is critical to keep us healthy, both mentally and physically. However, it is unnecessary to be a part of school activity because we have enough time to exercise after school. Schools should focus on academic performance and teaching actual knowledge. If physical exercise is removed, most students will be relieved because it is exhausting to do exercises. After exercising, we are not able to concentrate on other classes because we are tired. I think giving us a nap at noon could better utilize the time allocated to PE so that we can refresh our mind and get going in the afternoon.
